A FINE DOUBLE WHITE EPACRIS.

Most of the epacrises are valuable plants either for late winter or spring flowering. There was a time, as we all know, when heaths, epacrises and other plants of a like or allied character were extremely popular, and even now some kinds are grown more extensively than many would imagine. Hugh Low & Co., of Bush Hill Park, Enfield, and formerly of Clapton, have continued with great success the culture of the most useful hard-wooded greenhouse plants, and on various occasions their exhibits of acacias, ericas, epacrises, etc., have been of more than passing interest.

At present only one of the plants they have been so successful with need be mentioned, the double white-flowered form of the old Epacris onosmaeflora. The type has white flowers, but these may vary to a red shade. It was discovered by Allen Cunningham in October, 1822, in peaty bogs "on the Blue Mountains of New Holland, at an elevation of 3,400 feet above the level of the sea, and by him introduced to the Royal Gardens at Kew." The variety, E. onosmaeflora flore-plena, is also a direct introduction from Australia, and was introduced in 1876. It is an erect grower, the pure white, double flowers, like little flattish rosettes, clustering freely in the leaf axils along the wiry growths.

This is by no means a difficult plant to grow. After flowering it requires to be cut back somewhat severely, and kept in a genial temperature to ensure the production of new growth; a somewhat close atmosphere is also advantageous at this period, and while light syringings are beneficial, it will be necessary to apply but little water directly to the roots until growth is vigorous and the season advances. The needful potting is best done just after growth commences, and it is hardly necessary to emphasize the need of firm potting for such fine rooting plants. Shade must be provided from bright sunshine, and as growth progresses air must be increasingly provided, but early closing of the houses will materially assist development, giving air again late in the evening. During late summer and early autumn no protection is really necessary, but it may be more convenient to keep the stock in a pit than to plunge the plants outside. In any case, shade from midday sun must be provided at this stage, and measures must be taken to protect the fine roots from the effects of strong sunlight, either by boards placed on edge against the pots, or by ashes. By the middle of September the plants should be housed, for though they require very little heat, except during the growing period, and not much then, it is better not to run the risks of damage by early frosts or autumn gales.—Gardeners' Magazine.

I HAVE certainly been well pleased with the REVIEW and would not like to be without it; I think every florist should take it.—C. L. SHANKS, Newton, Kan.

YOUR paper is all right. I said it years ago when I sent my first dollar and I say it yet.—G. B. STEINHAUSER, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE FLORISTS' MANUAL, BY WM. SCOTT.

Is a book of 224 large pages (same size as those of the Florists' Review) and contains about 200 articles on commercial plants and cultural operations, each giving "the meat" only, from the personal experience of a thoroughly practical man who is in daily touch with each department of the business, and who has that rare quality of being able to tell others what they want to know. The articles are arranged alphabetically, like those in an encyclopædia, and in an instant one can turn to the subject upon which light is desired at the moment. The book is illustrated by over 200 fine half-tone engravings. It is and is a whole library on practical commercial floriculture in one volume. It is very handsomely and substantially bound in half leather, with specially designed title in gold. Following we print a few extracts from letters received from buyers of the book:

A Complete Reference Book for Commercial Florists

After reading Mr. Wm. Scott's Manual, we wish to say that we consider it without equal as a book of reference for busy florists.
GEORGE M. KELLOGG.
Pleasant Hill, Mo.

Mr. Scott's superb work, "The Florists' Manual," was indeed worth waiting for. When compared with the amount of practical information it contains, the selling price, $5.00, seems a mere bagatelle.
Oakland, Md. H. WEBER & SONS.

It is the best book of the kind ever published. There is more in it than in any other book I have ever seen. I am delighted with it.
Chicago. JOHN THORPE.

No progressive florist, old or young, can afford to be without the Florists' Manual. The old florist needs it, for reference, to aid a defective memory, and the young florist wants it as a guide in this progressive era of the florists' business.
Davenport, Ia. J. T. TEMPLE.

The Florists' Manual is worth five times the price. It is just what a busy florist wants.
Columbus, O. B. BUEHLER & SON.

Am well pleased with the Manual. It is a practical, everyday helper, concise and to the point.
Milwaukee, Wis. W. A. KENNEDY.

Am very much pleased with the book; it is very handy for reference.
Macomb, Ill. F. E. BONHAM.

Unlike so many of our books, it has the very flavor and essence of actual experience.
Ithaca, N. Y. L. H. BAILEY.

Franklin, Tenn. TRUEFT BROS.

Am much pleased with the Manual. It is just what I have been looking for. Something that we can understand, and enjoy reading.
Etna, Pa. M. NAUMAN.

I greatly appreciate the Florists' Manual. It is a splendid text-book.

Germantown, Pa. JOHN WELSH YOUNG.

Madison, N. J. A. J. BAUR.

If everyone has enjoyed your book as I have it's a successful publication. It is different from our usual horticultural works, being plain and concise—just what one wants.
Flushing, N. Y. H. D. DARLINGTON.

The copy of the "Florists' Manual" was duly received. I am very well pleased with same. The more I read it the better satisfied I am with it, and there are one or two articles alone in it that are each worth all you ask for the book, for everything is made so plain and all details are right to the point. I trust you may have a good and ready sale for the same.

STEAM BOILER FOR HOT WATER.

Is it practicable to convert a horizontal tubular steam boiler to a hot-water heater? If so, would you advise removing the steam dome? How many flows and returns will be necessary to heat 3,000 feet of glass? The boiler is eighteen horse-power. I use mostly soft coal slack and am using a cast iron heater, but the chimney gets most of the heat, as the draughts are direct, and when the damper is closed it does not give sufficient heat. H. R. B.

Horizontal tubular steam boilers make very efficient hot water heaters when arranged as return tube boilers, i. e., with the setting so arranged that the flame passes the length of the boiler under the shell before entering the flues which discharge into the smoke stack directly over the front of the fire box, but are cut off from it by proper mason work. While I prefer a boiler without a steam dome for a hot water heater, there is no serious objection to the dome. I cannot answer the question in regard to the piping with satisfaction to either myself or to the questioner without further information in regard to the houses to be heated, their length, width, height, size and use to which they are to be put. The size and distribution of heating pipes is entirely governed by the above stated conditions. If the necessary data is furnished, I will take pleasure in giving specifications for piping. L. C. C.

THE READERS' CORNER.

The Calla Disease.

I want to give you my experience with the calla disease, for it is a disease. It was several years ago I first had trouble with it. I had some California bulbs and some of my own. The California bulbs rotted first and then mine went, every one of them. At that time I tried to get information about the disease and its cause, but our most experienced florists could give me no help. Since then I have seen several other places where they had the same disease. Last winter one of my neighbors lost all his callas in the same way. Cannot someone throw some light on the trouble? A. SCHMITT.

I have given To-BAK-INE a thorough trial and find it a very satisfactory insecticide. So much so that I am using nothing else in my greenhouse since I found out its great merits. I consider it cheaper than any preparation of tobacco that I have any knowledge of because it does such thorough work that it is not necessary to use it very often.—EBEN E. REXFORD.

HEATING.

Judging from the number of inquiries, it seems that the heating problem is yet an unsolved problem for a good many florists and I am, myself, a little in doubt. Our ground is springy and a heater on the level of the piping would be the thing. It is never recommended, but I see the fine heating plants in our trolley and steam cars; they seem to give the best of satisfaction and are on a dead level. One is the Baker heater made in New York and the other the Peter Smith heater made in Detroit. I wish L. C. C. would give us some light on this system. G. O. K.

While I have no personal knowledge of the two heaters mentioned, I have no doubt that they are hot water heaters provided with an overhead riser and a closed expansion tank. This system can be worked on the level and was at one time quite extensively used in car heating. While they serve the purpose for which they are intended, the efficiency from such systems is in general lower than in plants where there is a good fall in the returns and the boiler is placed below the level of the return or radiating pipes.

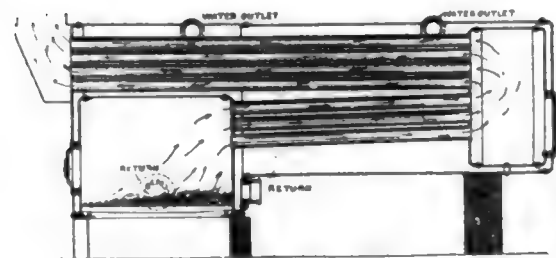

With large plants the heating plant is frequently placed on the surface of the ground and on a level with the houses. In fact the water line in the boilers is often far above the level of the radiating pipes. Here the gravity system is replaced by auxiliary steam or electric pumps, which are used to circulate the water in a hot water system or pump the return water into the boilers if steam is used. Small steam plants can be worked on this plan by using an automatic steam trap to lift the return water and discharge it into the boiler.

The science of heating with steam and hot water has been so far perfected as to enable us to quite easily overcome most, if not all, the problems we are likely to meet in greenhouse heating.

L. C. C.

Superior Boilers Are Good Boilers.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers, no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettig.

VICTORIA, B. C.—Mrs. Farrington is building two greenhouses, one 30x100 for chrysanthemums, the one 30x150 for carnations. The old houses are being remodeled and steam heating installed. With the new building she will have about 30,000 feet of glass for a general retail business. F. Francis is in charge as grower. Florists here have the advantage of those in the East. It never is very cold here and when the eastern people were frozen up we had flowers in bloom in the garden. Daffodils were in full bloom outside for Easter and crocuses were in flower in February.

A GREAT ACQUISITION. The best of all ferns for cut fronds. Brings the highest prices. The easiest to grow and the easiest to sell. Has received the highest encomiums from the leading cut flower dealers in the country. Buy now. Buy liberally and reap the benefits. * * Adiantum Croweanum originated at Utica, N. Y., about fourteen years ago, and has been extensively grown by the original owner, Mr. Peter Crowe, who has received phenomenal prices for the cut fronds in the New York and other markets, and has created a great demand for it. The fronds are long, elegantly proportioned and of a texture that renders it the best keeper and shipper of all adiantums. It is a very free and continuous grower, requires no rest, and responds readily to fertilizers. Anyone can grow it and get good money for it. Will be ready to ship July 1, 1904, out of 3-inch pots (strong plants) at the following prices: $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100; $250.00 per 1000; 25 at 100 rate, 250 at 1000 rate.

WHAT OTHER PEOPLE SAY ABOUT IT.

WILLIAM SCOTT, Buffalo, N. Y.—“I congratulate you upon securing the entire control of the distribution of the Adiantum Croweanum. On my frequent visits to my friend, Mr. Crowe, I have had an opportunity to observe this beautiful fern from the time when there were but a few hundred plants till last December, when I saw it occupying 20,000 sq. feet of glass. Its freedom of growth, length and beauty of fronds and its wonderful keeping qualities must quickly make it the only commercial Maidenhair Fern. From a very small plant you have in two or three months a splendid crop of fronds. There is no secret in its cultivation, but generous treatment. I feel sure you will find a widespread demand for this beautiful and distinct Adiantum.”

SAMUEL S. PENNOCK, Philadelphia, Pa.—“I consider your Adiantum Croweanum a very valuable acquisition to this line of ferns. It is an excellent commercial variety, good keeper, and has given the best satisfaction wherever we have sold it. Our customers much prefer paying an extra price for it than buying the commoner varieties. The great trouble we find is we cannot get enough to meet our customers' wants.”

JOHN I. RAYNOR, New York City, N. Y.—“During the two years in which I have had the sale of the fronds of Adiantum Croweanum in New York City, the demand has at all times far exceeded the quantity you have been able to supply me with, at $1.50 per 100, while ordinary Cuneatum has been, as a rule, in over-supply at half that price. It is without question the best fern for cut fronds ever seen in this market.”

ALEXANDER MONTGOMERY, Natick, Mass.—“I am very pleased to hear that you have decided to put plants of your fern Adiantum Croweanum on the market. I have always been more or less interested in it, as I understand it originated from some plants of Adiantum Cuneatum that I sold you at the Waban Conservatories in the early eighties. I remember the circumstances very well, as I sold the balance of our stock to Robert Craig in 1890. Wishing you ever success with it.”

C. F. TRUE, Honolulu, H. I.—“Your Croweanum sent on October 17 came to hand on 20th ult., in very fair condition. Kindly send me full information in regard to it.”

WELCH BROS., Boston, Mass.—“We readily dispose of Croweanum for a much higher price than we receive for Adiantum of ordinary varieties shipped in by our growers.”

“By far the best Adiantum that has been introduced to the Florists' Trade. Is a free grower, the darkest green of the Adiantum family and longest stemmed. It has also the most graceful foliage; the average length of the fronds measuring 30 inches. It is by far the best keeper. Cut fronds can be kept fresh several weeks in a cool place. It is also one of the best ferns for a dwelling house. I have given presents of this fern to several Utica friends, and from my own observation note it grows better than the Boston fern. I gave up rose cultivation some ten months ago in order to devote all my attention to fern cultivation for cut fronds. I find from the same amount of bench room this fern pays me $1.50 to every $1.00 obtained from roses.”—PETER CROWE.

THE MOST VALUABLE VIOLET TO GROW.....

WHILE DOUBLE VIOLETS have been "dumped" in the leading cities, good singles have been bringing good returns to the grower. The popularity of this Violet is astonishing. I have sold in the city of Boston this winter 1,300,000 blooms without having to make any sacrifice. You can do the same if you have good stock. You cannot afford to have poor stock. I have simply the best stock in the country. I will send out in May strong, transplanted stock for which I am now booking orders at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000. 500 at 1000 rate.

BEGINNINGS

THE BRIDE'S BOUQUET.

The Full Shower Effect.

For a good hand bouquet there will be required from 100 to 200 lilies of the valley, whether it is proposed to have the full shower effect, as shown in the first illustration, or the round hand bouquet with the partial shower effect as shown in the second illustration. The size and height of the person who carries the bouquet should be considered, also. Don't weigh down a dainty little bride with a half-bushel bouquet, unless she has no more appreciation of the fitness of things than to insist on it herself, and don't place a "two by four" shower in the hand of a six-footer.

The best foundation for such a shower as is first shown is a dozen sprays of Asparagus Sprengeri varying in length from a foot to a yard. Bunch them securely together about four inches from the stub ends. A medium heavy wire is the best tying material, for it not only fastens, but is stiff enough to hold itself in place. With the Sprengeri bunch half a dozen different length sprays of Asparagus plumosus, and a bolt of narrow ribbon cut in lengths to correspond with the Sprengeri sprays. Ribbon for a shower bouquet should not be wider than No. 9, nor narrower than No. 3. Velvet is the choicest, but embroidered gauze, taffeta and satin are all used.

Having caught in one end of each of the ribbon lengths, we now have a bunch composed of the two kinds of asparagus and ribbon, which, when held up, stem end down, will fall out airily from the hand. It will be our purpose throughout this process of making the shower bouquet to preserve this airy and light appearance. Set this much of the bouquet in a tall clean vase before you on the table, while the flowers are being made ready. Remove all the valley foliage from the flower stalks in order to reduce the bulk and weight. Leave the flower stalks full length, and replace about one-third the foliage by folding the smaller leaves loosely, without wrapping, around the lower ends of a part of the flower stalks. Have the sprays of the skeleton bouquet fall half way around the vase.

Attaching the Valley.

Begin at the top to fasten the lilies of the valley up and down the Sprengeri sprays with one or two wrappings of No. 36 wire, more heavily at the top, and gradually thinning the density towards the bottom. A small proportion may be fastened in an erect position at the top, but the most of the flowers are supposed to hang downwards, as though caught accidentally on the green. Knot the ribbon here and there in single loops and double bows, and in the ties have a spike of lily of the valley with its foliage. Let a few of the ribbon ends hang as they are, with a tiny cluster of flowers clinging to them. Through others of the loops pull a valley laden spray of the Sprengeri. Fluff all the sprays out, and see that none of the asparagus sprays are so heavy with the valley flowers that they lose their spring, and hang straight down.

Slip about a yard of ribbon through the stem end of the bouquet upwards and tie in a double bow, leaving a loop under the bow, large enough to slip over the hand or wrist of the wearer. It is a little more comfortable to hold the bouquet by the stem end, however, and if this method is preferred, wrap the stems this case the lilies of the valley should be prepared as before, by removing all and replacing part of the foliage. This bouquet will require from 150 to 200 lilies of the valley. For a foundation, tie together a dozen stiff, stubby stems of Sprengeri, or something else equally strong. Cross the stem ends, and when they are tied tightly they will look like a bottle brush.

Next, group the valley flowers into bunches of from six to twelve each, sheath each group with a leaf and wrap with a wire heavy enough to bear the weight of the bunch. Begin to wrap about a third of the way from the bottom of the stem and wind the wire spirally to the lower end of the stem, leaving the wire eight to ten inches long below, for extra stem length. After preparing all the valley for the main part of the bouquet in this way, take the stubby bunch of asparagus in the left hand and with foil and cover with a piece of the wide ribbon which completes the bouquet in a large bow at the back of the bouquet. Two yards of sash ribbon of a quality to correspond with the narrower ribbon used in the shower, will be sufficient. The large bow is not essential, but is often used.

With the Green Shower.

Another hand bouquet, with a partial shower effect in green, is presented in the next illustration. Perhaps this style is more often seen than the former. In run the wired bunches of valley through it by their sharp ends, till these same wire stems come out among the stem ends of the asparagus. Keep this up till the bunches of valley have all found a place in the bouquet, and its outline has become well rounded, yet not compact, the delicate sprays nodding freely, but securely fastened in their place. If any stray bits of blunt asparagus appear among the flowers, clip off their tops, or cover them with valley foliage, or a delicate green stemmed in the same way as the flowers.

Having completed the body of the bouquet, insert around the edge long sprays of some delicate asparagus. Have the lengths of the sprays vary slightly over and under a yard. The stub ends will slip in easily among the wires that carry the flowers, and they will hang out gracefully as shown in the illustration. Place in a tall, dry vase, as with the first bouquet, and fasten on a few scattering valley flowers, probably two or three dozen in all, as we see illustrated. Last of all, take four or five yards of handsome sash ribbon, wrap the stem end of the bouquet, cross the ends at the top and tie the double bow, leaving one end longer than the other, and the bunch is complete.

Use of Other Forms.

There are numberless variations on these two styles of hand bouquets, according to the number of flowers one is restricted to, and one's own skill and taste. Roses are often used for the latter style, but not for the former arrangement. But the real shower bouquet, the tum are used for the bridesmaids. These can be made in either of the above styles, wiring and tying the fronds precisely as was done for the flowers.

Another attractive style is to use the round bouquet of the second design with a border of narrow ribbon cut in yard lengths, tied around the stem end of the bouquet by the upper end of the ribbon and falling in the style of the green sprays in the illustration, and caught in the knots are single flowers or clusters of the flowers of which the shower is composed. No large bow of broad ribbon is used for this style.

VIOLETS.

The Rise of the Specialist.

In last week's issue of the FLORISTS' REVIEW I saw an article entitled "The Decline of the Specialist." I hope you will pardon me for taking the liberty to differ from your correspondent. I submit a few of the reasons for so doing, that he did a few years ago. I have had considerable experience in growing and selling violets, have also looked fairly and understandingly at the situation and have come to the following conclusions:

First, that there is as much money in growing violets now as there ever was; second, that the demand can only be met by the specialist, consequently the specialist should be the one who makes the money.

The writer gives overproduction as his first reason, saying that when some one else thinks you are having a good thing, then 'all plunge into it. This is the case on any kind of flower growing. It is human nature to do it. If they find it not the good thing they thought it was, they plunge into something else, but the specialist, because of present and past success, goes more into his specialty than before.

The writer says the demand is lessened when the product becomes too plentiful, while I believe the demand increases when the product increases. There is and, the chances are, at certain times there will always be, an oversupply and at certain times the supply will be far short of the demand, like last Easter, for instance. The real lover of violets will buy more when there is an ample supply than when the product is scarce. I believe the time is not far distant when violets will sell for far less money than they have ever done before, and yet a margin will be left for the grower.

Another reason for the decline of the specialist is given that violets never seem to be grown with equal success year after year and the writer blames the atmospheric conditions over which we have no control for this. I believe that the one who thoroughly understands violet growing can have the same or even better success each year. The many failures in violet growing can nearly all be traced to those who, as this writer says, plunged into it without any practical knowledge of their culture. Some have had success for a few seasons, while others have not had any success. I have no doubt but chance played a great part in the success of these plungers.

But what are our greenhouses for but to control the atmospheric conditions? The modern violet house, when properly handled, should overcome these conditions. The specialist here has a decided advantage. If a house now and then is a failure he knows the cause of that failure and profits by it in the future. He has a broader field to work on and, consequently, should have more and better violets, and he has to, in order to meet the demand. If the supply was to be curtailed there would not be any money in growing them, because you could not grow so many as you could sell.

I believe that for the one who can grow and put upon the market first-class goods, year in and year out, there is as good a chance at making money in growing violets as there is in any other flower, and the specialist above any one else is the one who is going to make it. I believe that the risk in growing violets has been reduced to a minimum by the specialist. If this was not the case the large modern violet houses which have been, and are being, erected by violet specialists clearly show that there is still something in violet growing and that the specialist is as yet not on the decline.

ideal one, is of fine, delicate flowers. Swainsona, daisies, violets, sweet peas, freesia, white lilac, Roman hyacinths, and all such delicate flowers are especially attractive for this purpose, and all can be made into hand bouquets in the same manner as the valley. For a white and green wedding, shower bouquets of adian-taking up each article that the writer gives as his reasons for the decline of the violet specialist.

He says that anyone who will look fairly and understandingly at the situation will be compelled to admit that the day has passed when the grower can make the good money growing violets Varieties and Benches.

After having made the decision to grow a house of violets you have to make your choice of the kinds that you will grow. Two things, if you have grown them before or handled them from other growers, will influence you greatly in this decision. First, the kind which your customers desire and, second, those that do best with you. This second reason, of course, know nothing about until you try them, if you have not previously cultivated them. I cannot tell you what is best for everyone to grow, but I may be able to mention some things that may help your decision. If you don't know what your trade wishes and have not before grown any, I would advise planting a fair quantity of all the varieties. This will give you an opportunity to ascertain which kind your customers prefer, and the kind that they do not want at all; also the kind that likes your soil and treatment. You will always find that different places have their preferences. Your city or town may wish nothing but single, your next town cares only for double, and still another town will make a decision between doubles, either choosing the light and refusing the dark, or contrary wise preferring the dark, though you may find the lighter much the easier to grow. But one thing you will find will never work well, no matter how nice they are, and this is the two together. The light or Lady Hume Campbell always shows to a disadvantage, as Marie Louise or Farquhar alongside of it make it look faded.

If you expect to grow some pot plants for your holiday trade, aside from those you have for cut flowers, you will find Lady Campbell far ahead in many ways: Longer stems and stiffer, holding the flower up out of and above the foliage much better than the Marie Louise; fragrance stronger; will stand a higher temperature and make a larger, stronger plant and the individual flower is larger and more rounded. As a usual thing the general grower has better success with it than with Marie Louise for cut flowers for the same reasons, yet some places absolutely refuse to buy it on any terms on account of its lighter color, no matter how well grown. Early in the season you will always appreciate having some single ones, even if you have no use for the flower, as they then furnish you with much better leaves for bunching than do the doubles.

If you have plenty of stock to fill your house of your own, all right, but if not it is time that you purchased some, so as to get what you want and the best that there is to be procured. Make a liberal estimate, so as to have plenty, more than you expect you want. As with all plants, something will happen to some of them, even with the best of care, and they will have to be replaced as soon as noted.

You will also have to decide if you will grow them on benches or in a solid border. We always prefer the latter, still I know of those who always use benches but this is not suited to us at all, the reason being, I think, that it is a light, gravelly loam. However, here is another case of where I would advise you to try both ways for yourself. Nevertheless, it is safer to grow in borders, as a rule, and I would only try one bench. If it is possible to do so have your border at least two feet above the paths, for the ease of working at them. They also like to be near the glass. We also consider narrow borders much better than wide, for several reasons, the greater reason being the better grade of flower, this apparently giving them more circulation of air.

In making up your borders be sure and have ample drainage, good coarse cinders, ashes or crushed stone, anything of this kind, putting the coarsest at the bottom and growing finer as you come up to the soil line, in order that your soil may not wash down into same, leaving space for six to eight inches of soil on top. You will also find it a good plan to get this all ready for the soil, water it heavily and let it settle a few days before covering it with the soil, so that you may level up hollows that are quite apt to result after a time.

THE WIETOR ESTABLISHMENT.

The wonderful development of the cut flower industry in the vicinity of Chicago in recent years has attracted the attention of the whole world, arousing the interest of all, the admiration of some and apprehension of others, even to the extent that the president of the S. A. F., at the Milwaukee convention, pronounced a warning to the craft against overbuilding. Of all the establishments which have spread out so remarkably, none has made a more rapid growth than that of Wietor Bros., at Rogers Park, Chicago. It was just ten years ago, on April 1, 1894, that this establishment first began in the cut flower line. Prior to that time there had been twelve small houses in which Henry Wietor was growing vegetables most successfully. But they saw a wider field in cut flowers and added another six small houses and went into roses and carnations. At that time they had possibly 50,000 feet of glass, today they have three immense ranges with a total of between 700,000 and 750,000 feet of glass. The accompanying illustrations give as near an adequate idea of the immensity of the establishment as is possible with a camera.

All the houses are devoted to cut flowers, practically roses and carnations. Beauty, Bride, Maid, Liberty, Meteor, Golden Gate and Ivory are the principal varieties in roses and of these there are many thousand plants each. They also grow La France and Kaiserin for summer crops and have a few other varieties in small quantity. They have found it wise to narrow down their list of carnations to some dozen of the leading varieties, of each of which they have many thousands, insuring a large cut daily of each variety. They have had splendid success all through the season. Chrysanthemums are grown in quantity for the fall trade and in recent years the rooted cutting and plant business has been developed to large proportions, several hundred thousand being sold each season.

The growing end of the institution is in the hands of Henry Wietor and the city salesroom is managed by N. J. Wietor.

When the firm first began selling, on September 24, 1894, it was at 41 Wabash avenue, as the Rogers Park Floral Co., handling the cut, also, of Adam Zender and John Muno. Presently this arrangement was dissolved and the salesroom removed to 51 Wabash, where Mr. Wietor twice daily cleans up surprising quantities of stock with amazing celerity.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Hanging Baskets and Veranda Boxes.

Hanging baskets, either of rustic wood-work, earthenware or wire-work lined with green moss, the latter the best of the three, have very much dropped in favor the past few years. It is a very artificial style of ornamental gardening and we are gradually getting away from the artificial and unnatural in our horticultural embellishments, not only in the garden, but likewise in the decoration of the home or a church. The days of the basket stuffed with damp moss and twenty varieties of short-stemmed flowers passed away with the Johnstown flood and the same basket with roses wired onto dry sticks is in the last stages of decline.

The Brilliant Flower Bed.

In the garden, let it be the "little front yard" or the splendid grounds of a multi-millionaire, there is nothing very artificial in a bed of one variety of plant of brilliant coloring. The eyes, or the vast majority of human eyes, love color and, besides that, do not our northern fields and woods give us masses of bright color at different seasons of the year? Acres of trillium in May, to be followed by fields of daisies and buttercups and later long banks of purple asters and goldenrod, and, alas, too often we see a field that should be green with the growing barley or wheat a glorious expanse of yellow mustard.

Beds of beautiful plants and flowers will always be planted and admired and a well ordered flower garden of a few acres, with enough grass between the beds to relieve the bright coloring, is as near paradise as some of us are ever likely to enjoy. Particularly appealing to your sense of the beautiful, however latent, are these flower gardens at dewy morn and near sunset.

Passing of the Monstrosities.

Another style of using several plants that lend themselves to such purpose is little seen. Now I allude to sun dials, the faces of famous men, pet dogs, elephants, etc. They may excite a little curiosity at first sight, the same as a look at Barnum's tattooed man used to do, but you would not want to look upon the poor man more than once a year and a dog done in echeveria would give you the rabies had you to pass him every morning. I don't want to class hanging baskets with these monstrosities and there may be old-fashioned houses, with wide verandas, where they may not be out of place. As I intend to say something about veranda boxes, very largely the same plants are suitable for both.

The Best Basket.

As remarked above, the wire basket lined with green moss taken off fallen trees is much the best basket. The plants root into the moss and the moss retains moisture. Then, again, the color of the moss harmonizes with the drooping plants. The so-called vines, the drooping plants, are the chief attraction and beauty of a hanging basket. The upright plants may become shabby and flowerless and it will be little noticed, but if the vines are dried up and sparse, then the whole affair is hideous. Like the soil for the veranda boxes and vases, it should be of the richest quality, about a third manure and in addition to that one quart of bone meal to a bushel of soil. Before the season is half over, if the plants have grown as they should, the small quantity of soil will be one mass of roots.

Plants to Use.

Geraniums of various colors, Begonia Vernon, with some foliage plants, will do for the center of the basket and then come the drooping plants that are expected to hang down a foot or two, completely hiding the basket. There is quite a variety suitable for the purpose. It is not necessary to have every one of these of rampant growth, such as the senecio, or German ivy, but every other one should be, or you will have a lop-sided effect. Some very common plants, almost weeds, are very serviceable in the baskets. Choiceness of varieties will not be sought so much as general effect. Senecio, the variegated glechoma, money vine, nasturtium, ivy geraniums, lobelia, double sweet alyssum, lophospermum, pilogyne, linaria are all suitable and you might put in one or two plants of maurandia and it will climb up the wire handles of the basket and add much to general appearances. The fuss and labor in watering the basket has had much to do with their going out of fashion, for unless they are well watered they quickly become unsightly.

Veranda Boxes Popular.

The veranda box may be as artificial an arrangement as the hanging basket, yet it is infinitely more of an embellishment to a dwelling. I believe our city, some ten years ago, carried this style of ornamental gardening to greater lengths than any city in the country. In some blocks on the best residence streets, where no fences or hedges existed and no ob-servable line of any kind marked the division of property, almost every veranda would have its twelve to 100 feet of veranda box filled with flowering and drooping plants. It assuredly adds greatly to the beauty of the street. The family in the easy chairs on the veranda cannot see what they have contributed to the beauty of their avenue. They have adorned their home for the pleasure of the neighbors and when they walk about they enjoy their neighbors' efforts. This is just as it should be and when we are all best pleased by pleasing others the world will be ready for wings. But I have no doubt that, with the great majority, when Mr. Closefist, on his veranda, sees the passers-by admiring his home and hears Mrs. Gush exclaim, "How lovely," he is convinced that his wife did well on insisting on the $25 outlay for filling the veranda boxes.

Size for Boxes.

A very good width for these boxes is eight inches at the bottom, nine inches at the top and six inches deep, all inside measurements. In some places larger boxes could be used, but the above is a good average that will suit most verandas. We have, in past years, been asked to have our carpenter make many hundreds of feet of these boxes and did not know any better than to have them made of pine, which only lasted three or four seasons. Make them of cypress and they will be sound for years. The rotting of the boxes is often the cause of their discontinuance. If sound, people will go on having them filled. I forgot to say, always have the boxes made in sections not over six feet long. Then you can take them to the greenhouse, where you can do far better work in every way than by carting plants and soil down the street.

If watered in any decent way at all, the plants in the boxes always do well. I can scarcely remember a case where one was not ornamental. There is no hard work in watering them, the hose does it, if not always judiciously, for I have seen John Thomas, the coachman gardener, drive at them with thirty-five pounds' pressure through the hose as if the poor plants were in danger of setting the house on fire. Yet if there are plenty of holes in the bottom of the boxes for drainage, the plants will survive.

Aspect Affects Material.

Before filling the boxes look to the aspect, whether they will get only a few hours' sun in early morning, whether a southern aspect or perhaps a northern; perhaps some spreading elm or maple may shade them the whole day. If shaded most of the time, then foliage plants must be used. The Begonia Rex has a fine appearance in these boxes in a shady place and the continuous blooming fuchsias, like old speciosa, does well. In the back row there should be some plants of attractive foliage. Grevillea robusta is one of the best and Dracena indivisa is always good. Dwarf, free-flowering canas look well as a background, but they devour the riches of the soil and starve weaker growing plants. Caladium esculentum must be used sparingly, if at all, for they monopolize the whole thing, yet they look cool and handsome. Vines here again are of the utmost importance and with care do most satisfactorily.

I have given but a short list of plants but really any flower garden plant that is a continuous summer bloomer will do very well in these boxes. A plant that would not flower till September or which flowers in June and then no more would be a fraud if put in as a flowering plant.

The color to paint the box is generally decided by the owner. Sometimes they are painted the color of the stone or wood-work of the veranda. When that is not the case, then a deep green is the color.

What Varieties to Grow.

Along in the early spring the question of what to propagate and how many to plant has to be met and decided upon. American Beauty, we begin to reason, has sold poorly most of the season, and has not paid; Liberty went to sleep just when it needed to be wide awake, and has been a good deal of a disappointment; Golden Gates frequently have had to be put into the ice box because they were left unsold; Bride has not brought as good prices as Bridesmaid, hence was not as profitable. Shall I then discard all the rest and plant only Bridesmaid? If we all did this there would be a good many flowers of this variety next winter.

As a general rule, I think soil and environment must largely determine what we should and should not grow, particularly when catering to a market like that of New York City. The man who can grow superb American Beauty should fill his houses with that variety. He who has succeeded in producing high-grade Liberty could hardly miss his mark if he continues to grow it in quantity; the same with Meteor, Bridesmaid and the rest. It is far better to grow one variety first-class and get a name for growing it well, than to grow half a dozen kinds, a few of each, and grow them all indifferently.

On the other hand, is it not a fact that in our specializing we have narrowed our growing down to about four to six varieties, just about one variety of each color? We frequently hear European growers visiting this country say, "Why do you grow so few varieties of roses for cut flowers in America when you have such a list of good ones to choose from?" Would not the public who buy our flowers appreciate a greater variety, and in many instances purchase more liberally if they had more choice? It is reasonable to suppose they would.

It has been charged against the buyers for some of our large retail stores that they are very loath to take up a novelty and show it to their patrons, lest they should get an order for it some time, which it might be difficult or impossible to fill. If this be true, I think such buyers are injuring the business of their house, as well as closing the door to some worthy aspirant to popular favor. Presuming what I have just said to be a fact that the grower must reckon with, I believe it is still to his interest, present and prospective, to endeavor to furnish as great a variety of choice and desirable roses to the flower buying public as he has it in his power to do. To this end he should plant and experiment with all the promising novelties and keep a correct account of sales from such for future guidance.

I am very glad to see so many new and interesting varieties here for our inspection to-night, and I compliment the New York Florists' Club and its present officers for what they have accomplished in bringing together these various exhibits from distant points, giving us growers a chance to inspect them and find out their merits without incurring much expense, and furnishing the growers of these novelties the opportunity to make a display the result of which must be both pleasing and profitable.

Chicago sends us Uncle John—a monstrous name, it seems to me, to give to a lovely rose that its introducers confidently expect will become a standard variety for forcing purposes! It seems to be identical with Golden Gate, of which it is a sport, except that its color is said to be as uniformly good as that of Golden Gate at its very best. The flowers of it I have seen were not nearly as large as those of our best Golden Gate; perhaps it will improve in this particular after dissemination.

Madame Abel Chatenay, also from Chicago, needs no apology for its name, which is pleasant to the ear; and its color, stem and general make-up create a very favorable impression.

La Detroit you have all seen before, both on exhibition and in the greenhouse, and have no doubt already formed your opinion as to its merits. As shown at Philadelphia a year ago, it was very fine, and some of our eminent rose men got very enthusiastic over it.

Canadian Queen at its best is a very chaste and beautiful flower; its one drawback, as far as I have seen, is its lack of uniformity of color. If it can be fixed so that it will be permanent in color and shape, we shall have a really desirable variety.

Killarney many of you are familiar with: It is uncommon, though not strictly new. It has shape and color and seems to be popular with the best class of buyers. The short-stemmed blooms lack in character somewhat and whether it would pay as well if grown quite extensively, as it has done during the present season, is a question to be determined later.

Ideal, a sport from La France, is a very beautiful rose; its fragrance, form and color are charming, and it is well worth a trial. The other new varieties here to-night I am not sufficiently acquainted with to criticize either one way or the other.

For variety some of the old favorites of a few years ago might very well be resurrected and brought to the front; some of them are so good that if they were offered us under a new name we would snap them up eagerly. Among them I would mention Madame de Watteville, Madame Hoste, Papa Gontier and Bon Silene. A grower in one of our western cities told me confidentially last spring that Bon Silene was one of the best selling and paying varieties on their list. Meteor is still a good all-the-year-round rose, and many who discarded it for Liberty are returning to their first love. If well grown, La France would sell as well now, comparatively, as it did fifteen years ago.

A HOME-MADE HEATING PLANT.

I am about to enlarge my plant and desire some information concerning heating. My present plant is small and the heating was planned and installed by myself, out of cheap material. It has, however, been very effective and answered every purpose of a plant house. I have been able to keep the temperature at from 45 to 50 degrees at night during the past winter by burning coke, leaving the fire for three hours at least, and kept the temperature quite steady. I could have carried a higher temperature by firing more often. My boiler is an ordinary upright, twenty-six inches in diameter and five feet high, having thirty-two 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch flues about three feet in length. I laid the boiler on its side, with the door opening down, and bricked it in, closing the bottom with brick. I thus had a fire place that was about fourteen inches wide, fourteen inches from grate to boiler and three feet in length. My grate was about thirteen inches wide and eighteen inches long, ordinary bar grate. The fire would be carried along the under side of the boiler through the doorway and returning through the flues. I bolted on the cap or dome, which was built for a 10-inch pipe. This I reduced to eight inches, passing into a chimney a few feet distant. Last year I bought a sheet-iron smokestack twenty-two feet high and fifteen inches in diameter. This I obtained very cheap, but it condensed the smoke and was always cold and dead. It soon rotted out. The past winter I used ten feet of 10-inch tile and always had a good and sufficient draft.

The boiler was tapped on the upper side, about half way from each end, by a 2-inch pipe, which rose to a height feet, the four returning under the benches and the bunch of three along the west side wall, all coming together at the north end again into a short length of 2-inch pipe, my mixer, thence returning to the bottom of the boiler. About one-half of the boiler is covered by a propagating bench, which is further heated by a coil of pipe. The greenhouse is 20 x 43 feet; the west side wall four feet high; twelve feet high in center; the south end connected with office, having a few feet of glass, however. The 1-inch pipe I got for a song. It is in nine-foot lengths and could be used for supports in my new house.

What I want to know is this: How much more glass will that boiler heat with a reasonable amount of care and what size pipe should I get? I have been heating with hot water. Would it make the boiler more efficient if it were tapped with two more 2-inch flows; which would rise to a 3-inch or a 4-inch main flow? It seems to me that it could then be fired twice as hard as I have fired it.

Here is another question: In the present instance, if I had 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch pipes instead of 1-inch, or if I had more 1-inch in the said house, would the same amount of firing have created a higher temperature or would it have been necessary to fire stronger to heat the additional pipe? If I should build an additional house 25 x 150 would you advise a larger boiler and with other additions in view what size and kind of boiler would you advise? I have just finished a propagating house 16 x 16 at the north end of the house 20 x 43.

A. W. T.

The piping system which you have worked out is certainly a novel one, but since it seems to have been efficient and

You have, as I understand it, fourteen 1-inch pipes running from end to end of your house, seven flows and seven returns. These fourteen 1-inch pipes, if forty feet long, provide only 192.6 feet of radiation, which is about 100 feet less than would ordinarily be provided for maintaining a temperature of 50 degrees in such a house. The only explanation that suggests itself is that you are able to heat the water in the boiler to 200 degrees, which would account for the efficiency of the small amount of piping in the house. This in connection with the fact that the boiler, which is capable of supplying heat for 500 feet of radiation, has only been carrying less than 200. If you increase the amount of radiation by the addition of more houses it will be necessary to somewhat increase the piping in this house because it will be necessary to circulate a somewhat greater amount of water. It is likely that you can heat another house the same size of the one you have with the present boiler. If you can have the boiler tapped out for a 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch flow in place of the 2-inch it will carry the full capacity of your boiler, or you can accomplish the same thing by tapping for a second 2-inch flow, i. e., using two off-take pipes instead of one. The returns should, however, be of nearly equal capacity.

If you wish to build an additional house 25 x 100 feet it will require a very considerable increase in the size of the boiler. The present house 20 x 43, the house 16 x 16 and the house 25 x 100 would require a boiler with about 125 feet of heating surface, while the one you have, if dimensions are correctly stated, has about sixty-five feet.

of about seven feet from the level of the floor (the boiler is about one-half its diameter above the level), and crosses the end of the house. It commenced to drop from the point above the boiler and when I tapped the 2-inch I did so from the under side. At the center of the house I tapped with 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch, branching to four 1-inch pipes. At the end of the 2-inch pipe it branched to three 1-inch pipes. These seven 1-inch pipes were carried the length of the house, forty fairly economical, no criticism need be made. The small pipes (1-inch), however, make the flow of water slower than it would be in larger pipes because of the greater friction and the small volume of water contained in them. The usual practice is to carry the risers full size to the most distant point in the system, which should also be the highest point, and there sub-divide into the required number of returns to provide the temperature desired.

LEAF-MOLD IN ORCHID CULTURE.

The results obtained from the use of leaf-mold in the cultivation of orchids have fully justified the advice we gave to orchidists some two years ago to exercise the greatest care, both in the preparation of the composts containing that substance, and in watering the plants growing in them, says the Gardeners' Magazine. We suggested at the same time that the use of this material should be regarded as in the experimental stage, and pointed out that while a liberal proportion of decayed leaves might, with special care in watering, encourage a vigorous leaf growth, it may not be favorable to flower production. Further experience would appear to show that this is really the case. It appears to be proved to demonstration that used with the requisite care leaf-mold is highly favorable to the rapid development of leaf growth. Seedling orchids, when growing in a mixture containing a liberal proportion, make a more rapid progress than in peat or sphagnum, or a mixture of the two, and, as a rule, reach a flowering stage in a shorter period. Not only seedlings, but young plants raised by division, whether of home growth or imported specimens, grow more rapidly when potted in leaf-mold, or in a mixture of which it forms a large part, and a noteworthy feature in these and seedlings is the great increase in the size of the pseudo-bulbs and leaves, as compared with those of the previous season, for two or three years after the change in the component parts of the compost has been made. This is only what might have been expected from the liberal percentage of nitrogen in the decayed leaves, and the question of special interest is the capacity of these fat pseudo-bulbs and ample leaves for resisting adverse influences equal to those of plants grown under the conditions that have long obtained in orchid culture. As yet very little evidence has been forthcoming as to the desirability of adding leaf-mold to the compost in which established specimens of large size are grown, whether as regards the growth or the flowering. That leaf-mold is advantageous in promoting the growth of young plants has been satisfactorily shown, and judging from the evidence forthcoming it would appear that it has the disadvantages of promoting the production of flowers wanting in staying power, more particularly when cut from the plants. Orchids are now so largely used in decorations on festive occasions that a shortening of the period during which they retain their freshness and beauty is a serious disadvantage. Therefore it is a point of some importance to determine by practical tests whether the staying power of the flowers of all orchids is similarly affected, and in the case of those that have their duration reduced the difference in the time which the flowers of plants grown with and without leaf-mold retain their freshness under precisely the same conditions. Half-a-dozen tests of this kind would be more conclusive than any number of general statements, and we commend the question to those who own or are in charge of large collections.

SOIL STERILIZATION.

Messrs. A. F. Woods and R. E. B. McKenney, of the Bureau of Plant Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, have devoted much attention to the subject of soils, incidentally those employed in greenhouses. Soil sterilization is rapidly coming into favor for all extensive work where the process is practicable. The usual method for greenhouse use is to build a large bin, about four feet wide by ten or fifteen feet long, and three feet deep, running pipes through the bottom of the bin, or through the bin a foot from the bottom, a foot apart lengthwise. In a four-foot bin there would be three pipes, with one-sixteenth inch holes drilled in them on the under side, about one foot apart. Fill the bin loosely with soil; turn in steam of about eighty pounds' pressure; put a few potatoes in the top of the soil, an inch or so under the surface, then cover the surface with tight boards or cloth, in order to prevent escape of the steam. Usually one or two hours under good pressure, if the soil is not too heavy, will cook the potatoes in the top of the soil; then one may be sure that the parasites and weed seeds have been destroyed. If high-pressure steam is used the soil will dry rapidly after the steam is turned off, and can be shoveled out of the bin without much difficulty, especially if one side of the bin is removable.

In sterilizing soil without the use of a bin, the same process is used. The pipes are laid in the ground to be sterilized in a similar manner as in the bin. If it is desired to sterilize a foot of soil, the pipes should be placed under the soil about a foot, with the drill holes on the under side; the surface should then be covered with boards, or something to prevent the escape of the steam, and the soil should, of course, first be loosened, so that the steam can circulate through it.

A few potatoes distributed over the area will tell when the sterilization has become complete. After the sterilization the pipes can be removed. It is a good plan before sterilizing to mix in the farmyard or stable manure that is to be used, as this often contains numerous weed seeds. If artificial manures are used, of course it is not necessary to add them first.

Any small high-pressure boiler will serve to make the steam. Some use a small independent boiler for the purpose, others attach the apparatus to their high-pressure boiler. A low-pressure boiler is usually unsatisfactory, as it takes a longer time to circulate the steam, it leaves the soil wet and soggy, and does not do the work very well.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Prices have remained quite firm during the past week. The dark, damp weather has materially shortened the output, but there has been plenty to go around. Prices on roses have remained pretty much the same, best Beauties bringing $30, with Brides and Bridesmaids at from $6 to $10. Hybrids have been more plentiful. Carnations continue of fine quality; a few fancies bring $4, good stock $2 to $3 per 100 and ordinary grades $10 per 1,000. Violets still come in but a few warm days will finish them. Outdoor narcissi and tulips are appearing, of good quality. Sweet peas are plentiful and fine. Lily of the valley continues abundant at from $2 to $3.

Activity Outdoors.

April has been doing herself proud of late in the way of precipitation. For the sixty hours ending April 29 at 8 a. m., the weather bureau reported 5.09 inches of rain. These figures are official and not open to dispute. This certainly beats all records for a good many years back. We do not hear of any serious damage as a result of the heavy rain, except the filling of some cellars, putting out of a few boiler fires and the flooding of low lands.

Warmer weather succeeded the deluge and the result on vegetation has been almost electrical. The click of lawn mowers is universal, daffodils and tulips make our gardens gay and a few early shrubs, which have escaped unscathed from the winter's ordeal, are adding some touches of color.

A few carnation growers have started to plant out their stock. Planting will not be general, however, for another week, owing to the danger from late spring frosts. Quite a number propose trying indoor culture on a small scale.

A good deal of tree planting was done in this vicinity on Arbor day, April 30. In the way of shade trees Norway and sugar maples were most largely planted. Some elms and lindens were also used. The warfare on the gypsey moth was waged in the sections infested by this pest and thousands of nests destroyed.

Various Notes.

An invitation has been extended to the Daughters of the American Revolution, who are holding their convention in Boston this week, to attend the exhibition of plants and flowers at Horticultural Hall on May 7.

Superintendent Doogue has been moving a number of large trees on the Common lately. Boston's historic recreation ground presents a rather incongruous spectacle at present, the ground being manured, plowed and harrowed, prior to seeding. The addition of new loam and manure should greatly stimulate the trees, which were in a half-starved condition.

The public gardens are now putting on their gay spring attire. Narcissi are at their best and towards the end of the present week hundreds of thousands of tulips will be in bloom. Some beds of double wall-flowers are quite effective and much admired. The use of bulbous plants in the more select residential sections of Boston is yearly increasing.

Superintendent J. A. Pettigrew and his small army of men are very busy these days in the extensive Boston park system. An immense amount of planting is being done. Considerable damage to shrubs was sustained during the past winter. Mr. Pettigrew's planting is not merely for immediate effect, without any other particular object in view, but he plans and plants for the benefit of future generations. W. N. CRAIG.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Saturday, the last day of the month as well as of the week, was a really good day for the florists. At least one wholesaler telegraphed for more carnations. Stock generally was pretty well sold out. This week has not opened so well. Flowers are accumulating considerably, due to increased production, combined with a lack of life in business.

Sweet peas have been in good supply and brisk demand, proving that they are as popular as ever in season: Nota bene; in season. No healthy mortal cares about strawberries in midwinter. Carnations are still selling well, the colored sorts a shade better than the whites. To judge from appearances, Beauties are down in price again, but by no means in quality for they are excellent. The other roses have fallen a little. Their ranks have been strengthened by some fine Kaiserins. The overplus of lilies is past; they bring better prices now. Valley has been coming into the market in quantity a little more than sufficient to meet the demand. Pansies have continued popular. Leo Niessen disposed of 5,000 bunches last week, about his regular quantity. Double violets can still be seen of good quality. Outdoor bulbs are in flower. They are not serious factors, except possibly in reducing the demand.

Southampton.

It is a well understood thing among the growers what going to Southampton means. You take the little, one-track road for Newtown (no, not Newtown Square) through pretty, rolling country, past Fox Chase, Paper Mill and other suggestive stations until you reach a prosperous looking place where nearly everybody leaves the train. That is Southampton. You avoid the bus driver and strike off into the country. After a short walk between neat cottages and fertile fields you approach an imposing range of glass, much larger than a few years ago. It is Stephen Mortensen's, the original of the famous "Samuelson of Hatboro," about whom my friend K. grew so enthusiastic. "The combination between the soil and Samuelson," he said, "produces splendid Bridesmaids." There was Stephen himself ready to extend the glad hand of welcome and show you one of the neatest places imaginable.

The entire place is devoted to roses grown for cut flowers, Beauties, Brides, Bridesmaids and Liberties being the varieties grown. The last named sort has won favor and will be more largely planted for next season. It is now making fine canes from the lower eyes. A narrow house formerly used for mignonette has produced as good Liberties through the winter as the large house. Grafted plants of Bridesmaid have shown more vigor and bloomed more freely than those on their own roots. They will, therefore, be more largely planted this summer and from them will be taken the cuttings for the following year's stock, to secure the greatest possible vigor. Bride is looking well and has evidently been blooming profusely. The method of heating is by hot water. The entire cut of this place goes in each morning, Sundays excepted, on the 5:30 a. m. train to Samuel S. Pennock.

A Spare Moment.

It was a pleasure to watch the snap and system displayed by a band of workers in a large seed store one morning this week. The pleasure was increased when the head of the house, Henry F. Michell, stopped to say a pleasant word. Business, he said, was late in beginning, but now it is ahead of past years. He spoke of the wonderful beauty of salpiglossis, the so-called poor man's orchid, as grown from their seed by Edwin Lonsdale. Florists ought certainly to sow it now, and also in the fall, for cut flowers. Another seed worth sowing for the same purpose is lupinus, now obtainable in separate colors. Both varieties of seed will bloom four months after sowing.

Various Notes.

Wm. J. Riehle, of Lansdowne, Pa., has ordered building material from Lord & Burnham Co. for two houses each 23 x 100 to be used for growing carnations. Mr. Riehle is a beginner in the business.

Abram Hostetter, of Manheim, Pa., will erect one new house, 20 x 100 feet, and rebuild two old houses, one 20 x 72 and the other 20 x 172, using Lord & Burnham's material throughout.

N. D. Comly, of Bustleton, Pa., will erect one house 20 x 150. Like the preceding grower his specialties are violets and carnations, although he is unique in following his violet crop with rhubarb, which has proved profitable this spring.

D. T. Conner can be found each morning at the Flower Market by would-be greenhouse builders, to whom he would be happy to show his Lord & Burnham models.

Charles F. Edgar & Co. state that they are receiving nice Kaiserins.

Eugene Bernheimer is handling fine sweet peas in three colors.

Charles E. Meehan, manager of the Flower Market, went out to W. K. Harris' the other day. He found a new variegated form of bougainvillea considered very promising. There were a fine lot of Crimson Rambler roses in pots, not yet in bloom; some narcissi, princeps and poeticus; a promising stock of the butterfly primrose, a fine lot of decorative plants and many other good things, including a hearty welcome.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

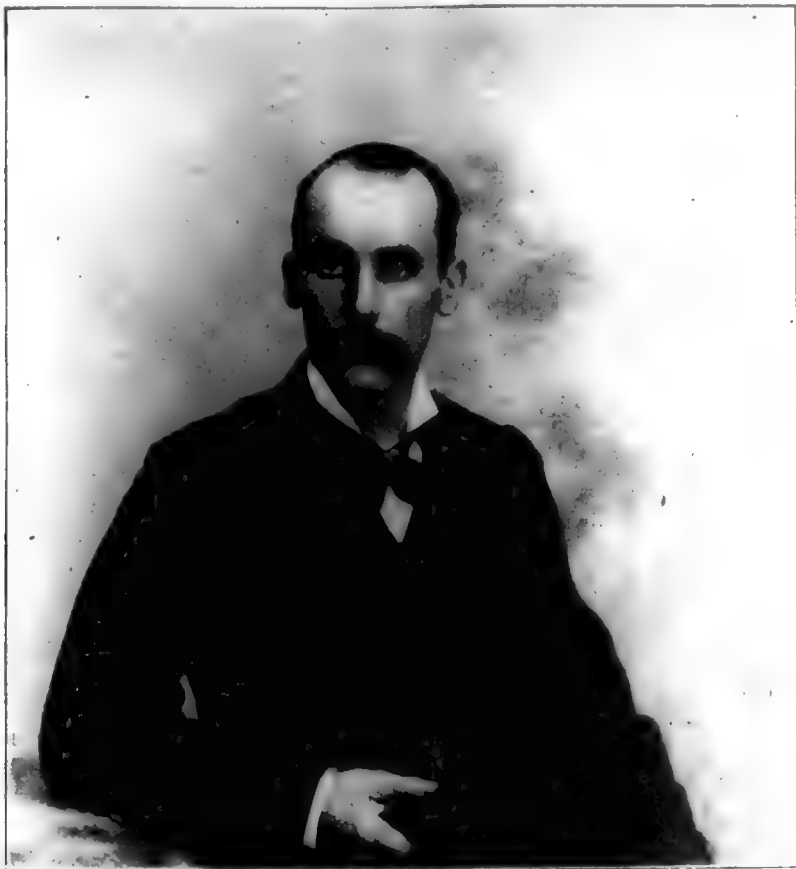

Better weather conditions revive activity in both retail and wholesale circles. Backward spring has retarded planting in all its branches. Trade improvement was noticed the past week among the plantmen, seedsmen and landscape gardeners. Among the florists in the stores the counter trade is gradually falling off and the warm days prevent them from making their usual window displays. Some funeral work is always going on among the down-town store men, but in the west end the retailers do more decorative work for receptions, weddings and dinner parties. A lot of cut flower work was done last Saturday for the opening of the World's Fair, as a number of state buildings were decorated with plants and large bunches of roses, carnations and lilies, all presenting a handsome appearance. Everybody had a holiday on Saturday, but as usual the poor florists had to work and some of them very hard.

Choice cut flowers are not any too plentiful, but more of the ordinary grades are in than the demand calls for. Roses of all kinds are in large supply. Fancy stock runs from $6 to $8, firsts $4 to $5 and seconds $2 to $3 per 100. Fancy American Beauties are coming in better, with a fair demand at $4 per dozen, with shorts as low as $5 per 100. The best stock in carnations is selling clean, with fancies at $4 and $5, firsts $2.50 and $3 and ordinary at $1.50 and $2 per 100. Fancy Lawson, Prosperity and Wolcott are in great demand but some of the common sorts are generally left over after the morning sales. Bulb stock is in the same condition as last reported; very little sale for it with plenty of it dumped. Almost any price will buy the best Harrisii and callas are quite plentiful at from $6 to $8 per 100. Sweet peas are fine at $1, and from that down to 50 cents per 100. Southern lilac is coming in but not in very good condition. The first sold at $5 per 100 sprays.

The latter part of the week the fine weather kept the greenhouse men constantly on the go delivering plant orders. Trade in this line is going to be big, as everybody is going to look his best for the visitors coming to see the great World's Fair.

Death of John Young.

It pains me to report this week the death of our friend and craftsman, John Young, head of the firm of C. Young & Sons Co. Mr. Young died suddenly on Friday night, of neuralgia of the heart, while attending the performance at the Olympic theater with his wife and daughter. He was taken suddenly ill after the first act and was taken home in a carriage and died an hour later. Mr. Young was a member of the S. A. F., the St. Louis Florists' Club and the Florists' Bowling Club. The funeral took place on Sunday afternoon, from the late residence, 4536 Forest Park boulevard. He leaves a wife and four children, four brothers and two sisters and a countless number of friends in the trade to mourn his loss. Beautiful floral designs were sent by the Florists' Club and the Bowling Club and many others from friends. Nearly all the members of the Florists' Club were in attendance. The pall bearers were his four brothers, Fred C. Weber and J. J. Beneke. The interment took place in the family lot in Bellefontaine Cemetery.

The last look at the face of our friend,
Whose glance has lost its beam,
His brow was cold as the marble stone,
And the world a passing dream;
The last press of his kind hand,
A look at the closing eye,
Yield that his heart must understand
A long, a last good-bye.

Various Notes.

James Hartshorne, of the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., arrived Sunday morning with a big lot of cut carnations for show in the Horticulture building at the World's Fair grounds.

George M. Kellogg, of Pleasant Hill, Mo., was a visitor the past week, attending the opening of the World's Fair. Mr. Kellogg has made application for membership in our local club.

Walter Gillis has resigned his scholarship at Shaw's Garden and is now employed at the World's Fair grounds. It will be the duty of the local club to appoint his successor at its next meeting, on May 12. Young Mr. Roper, now at the garden, has made application for the place.

The next meeting of the Florists' Club will be held next Thursday afternoon, May 12, at 2 o'clock. Some very important business is to be transacted and a large attendance is hoped for. Two discussions will be lead, by J. F. Ammann and F. W. Ude, Jr. Their subjects are "Replanting Rose Stock" and "Growing of Violets," which will be interesting to all the members.

J. A. Evans, of Richmond, Ind., spent Sunday in St. Louis.

The Missouri Botanic Garden received a thousand-dollar importation of orchids last week. They have now the second largest collection in the world.

Arthur Cowee, of Berlin, N. Y., is busily engaged in the Horticulture building, attending to his display.

James Young will, from now on, fill the place left vacant by his late brother at the store, at 1406 Olive street. James is a fine fellow and should make a splendid manager.

Charlie Young and his wife left last Monday night for a three months' trip to the Pacific coast.

John Steidle, of Clayton, made a fine exhibition of cut carnations in the Horticulture building on Monday. Those staged were Estelle, Prosperity, T. W. Lawson, Harlowarden, Gov. Wolcott and Enchantress. Several others have made entries, but failed to show. James Hartshorne, of the Chicago Carnation Co., was in the building, but his carnations failed to arrive. J. J. B.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The week past was full of clouds and storms, business slumped steadily and some sad clearing out of flowers of every kind took place before the wholesalers shut up shop on Saturday night. In quantities the buyer's offer was final. It would be a shame to quote the fall of some of the good things. Violets made their final exit in disgrace, 10 cents to 25 cents per hundred for the best in the market, which was an ungrateful but apparently universal way of speeding the parting guest.

Notwithstanding the flood of April weddings crowded into the last few days of the vernal month, the general market felt none of the exhilaration of the young folks and refused to enthuse. Society seems to be devoted to dinners without number and May opens with weddings at wholesale. But all these influences do not cause a ripple on the placid sea of abundant supply of flowers of every kind. Orchids and valley remain firm. Lilies are abundant; 4 cents is a fair average price for the best of them. Carnations were especially "knocked" last week, until on Saturday any price was welcome. I saw 600 assorted give up their happy home for a $2 bill. Roses shared in the general retrograde. They had as bad a day on Saturday as the Russians on the Yalu. Beauties surrendered at 12 and 15 cents. The finest Brides and Maids yielded at 6 cents down for the best of them. It is impossible to make arbitrary prices, therefore, in the official list and while those given are accurate on the day of quotation, which is necessarily Monday of each week, there is abundant time before Saturday arrives for some mighty striking changes. This should not be forgotten when criticisms are made on quotations of the early days of any week. The market is a thing of a day and not a week and floriculture has not yet advanced to the necessity of a daily, though this may be the case before the pioneers of cut flower wholesaledom are gathered in. The present week opens warm, sunny, springy, with values normal.

Spring is Here.

The parks are an inspiring vision after the long and dreary winter. Sunday was an ideal spring opening by Madame Nature, more beautiful and far-reaching even than Bro. Beneke's wonderful Fair, which has just arrived in such a blaze of glory. Later on when the S. A. F. invades the Ivory City, we hope to rejoice in its grandeur and realize its horticultural triumphs. But now in our very midst we have an exhibition that displays the magic touch of the Infinite and reaches every heart, while its beauties are as free as the air and its inspiration awakens all humanity to a new existence. Never seemed the grass so green, the early flowering forsythea so golden and the burning bush so brilliant as now, while "all the trees on all the hills open their thousand leaves." So while "blessings brighten as they take their flight;" blessings are infinitely welcome when long delayed. Now the work of a month must be accomplished in a week and the plantings of the seedsmen and the nurserymen rushed day and night, if ordinarily practical results are to be accomplished.

Various Notes.

John B. Nugent, Jr., journeyed to Madison last week and bowled with the Morris County Gardeners' Society, of which he is a member. With unassuming modesty he quotes only the scores made by the balance of the bowlers and seems to think they could give the New York Club a run for their money.

President Siebrecht, of the New Yorks, has been too busy buying mansions lately to bowl, and his purchase of the Lockwood estate near his Astoria residence is considered a splendid business investment. All his friends congratulate him on this evidence of his prosperity. He certainly made a ten strike and ought to give a good account of himself at St. Louis.

The supply men have European trips on their summer programs. Geller is already there and others contemplate the voyage before the close of May. They have all earned the holiday and have had one of the best seasons on record.

Wild smilax is about at an end for the present, an occasional box now and then coming to town, but the supply is about exhausted.

The daily papers are giving a great deal of valuable publicity to the growers' plant market in the big tents at Canal and West streets.

Next Monday the bedding plant exhibit at the New York Club rooms should attract a creditable exhibition and a large attendance. The regular monthly meeting of the club will be held and William Elliott will read his paper on the "Idiosyncrasies of the Auction Business."

Dr. Earle, of the New York Botanic Garden, has been appointed director of the new agricultural station at Santiago de las Velas, Cuba, some twelve miles from Havana.

A. Miller, a member of the New York Florists' Club and for some time foreman at the Botanic Garden conservatories, has taken a position as head gardener with Millionaire Barley, of Mount Vernon, N. Y., where his skill in developing a new place will have ample opportunity.

To give some conception of the enormous sums expended in the vicinity of New York on country estates, L. Blair, of Far Hills, N. J., is stocking his handsome estate with rare shrubs and trees, and making landscape and other improvements that will entail an outlay of nearly a million dollars. The Stow estate, at Westbury, L. I., is another example of horticultural enterprise and development, over half a million dollars having been expended here during the past year.

The Horticultural Society of New York holds its annual exhibition at Bronx Park Botanic Garden next Wednesday and Thursday. Leonard Barron, secretary, will forward the schedule of premiums, etc., to all applicants. It includes the usual $50 prize for the best horticultural novelty. It is more than likely another fern applicant for popular approbation may carry off the coveted honor. The attendance at this meeting should be large. In addition to the added enjoyment of a visit to this beautiful park, an illustrated lecture by J. Horace McFarland, of Harrisburg, will be delivered on Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock on "Common Trees and Their Uncommon Flowers."

Geo. Saltford has had a two week's rest on the cushioned seats of the jury box, and returns much refreshed to his arduous wholesale duties.

John N. May has returned from the sunny south much improved in health.

Thursday of this week the stockholders of the Cut Flower Exchange will hold their annual meeting in their office in the Coogan building. The retiring directors are John Johnson, Charles Smith, Philip Miller, Wm. Duncan and John Taylor.

The Bonnot Bros. are the king bees at Flemington, N. J., where their greenhouse plants will be overhauled and added to materially this summer.

One of the old retail houses of New York, so long established where the great Flat Iron building now stands, and later across the way on Broadway, has landed in the swim on Fifth avenue, and will shortly open a handsome store between Thirty-eighth and Thirty-ninth streets, right in the heart of the retail district and surrounded by some of the largest florists' establishments in New York.

Bowe had the Picard-McAlpin wedding last week, with elaborate church and house decorations, the ceremony taking place at the Collegiate church, Seventy-seventh street and Broadway, and the reception in the palm room of the St. Andrews hotel. Valley and American Beauties were used profusely, with canopy of white lilac, sweet peas and white roses.

Capt. Lang, of the bowling club, has been quite ill and a felon on his best bowling finger has kept him out of the game for weeks. He hopes soon to be in condition for his 200 average. Mrs. Lang still favors her dislocated shoulder.

Armin Kretchmar, of Brooklyn, is now in San Francisco in one of the leading retail stores of that city. His uncle, Julius Kretschmar, who suffered a stroke of paralysis some weeks ago, is much improved and hopes are entertained of his complete recovery.

The development of the new fern, Scotti, is remarkable. Its rapidity of growth is phenomenal. When I visited of the club will refuse to show a practical interest in its welfare by the return of the tickets already in their hands.

The American Institute of New York has all arrangements made for its dahlia show in September, and for its elaborate effort in November, which in addition to the chrysanthemum exhibition will include fruits and vegetables. Dr. Robert Taylor is manager of both, and the veteran C. L. Allen declares that "from the encouragement given I think it will be the greatest display of agricultural and horticultural products ever seen in this or any other country."

Bowling.

The Bowling Club was fairly attended on Monday evening, some distinguished visitors being present. Next Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock, the club will meet at the usual place, instead of in the evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all who intend being present at the club meeting in the evening to visit the alleys and enjoy the sport. Matters of importance must be decided and the club selected for the St. Louis convention and President Siebrecht asks a full attendance. The following scores show which way the wind blows:

At Flatbush.

It is always bowling night on Thursdays at Flatbush. It is a comfort to visit where harmony prevails, loyalty to the club's interests is in evidence and seclusion and hospitality assured. Eugene Dailedouze was an interested spectator last week, his bowling back still being like his will, unbending. The Flatbush Club can send a strong team to St. Louis if it wants to. They are open to challenge from any adjacent club, preferably New York. Some of the old stand-bys were absent, among them John I. Raynor, Will Siebrecht and Davy Mellis. Riley absorbed the lion's share of the pots, as usual. The scores follow:

Riley	132	151	166	185

BRITISH HAIL ASSOCIATION.

The Nurserymen's, Market Gardeners' and General Hailstorm Insurance Corporation of Great Britain has been in existence nine years. Harry J. Veitch is chairman. The company now insures 34,423,363 square feet of glass and the premium payments last year were about $12,000. The reserve is $37,500. But only seven losses were paid in the year.

MONTREAL, QUE.—Hall & Robinson have a white sport of Mrs. Lawson which is considered a fine thing by all who have seen it. They will work up a stock of it.

EAGLE GROVE, IA.—W. E. Garrett is a thoroughly competent florist and nurseryman, but finds little opportunity for either business in this vicinity. His present business is exclusively gardening and small fruit growing.

its headquarters two or three weeks before Easter there were three houses of stock in pots and benches, now there are six at Flatbush and one house full at Keap street, in the city. There are many thousands of the small plants in 2¼-inch pots ready for June 1 delivery, as well as grand stock in 4-inch pots, which will be ready to transplant into 6-inch. Hundreds of specimens in 6 and 8-inch pots for the retail trade and in pots and tubs up to 14-inch, will also be ready for distribution. All the leading retailers in this vicinity have placed orders with Mr. Scott, who welcomes visitors at any time.

President Traendly, of the Florists' Club, is taking a warm personal interest in the success of the annual outing and suggests that all firms desiring to help the program of sports, communicate with Chas. Schenck, the treasurer of the committee, to whom all remittances may be made. It is necessary, also, to know at once how many will attend, that proper arrangements may be made for the comfort and convenience of all. And it is sincerely hoped that not a member

THE MARKETS.

CHICAGO, May 4.—Radishes, 25 to 55c dozen bunches; rhubarb, 40 to 60c 40-pound box; lettuce, heads, 50c to $1.25 bushel, leaf, 15 to 30c case; cucumbers, 50 to 75c dozen. Large receipts.

BOSTON, May 2.—All kinds of vegetables are arriving more freely and prices are lower. Cucumbers in full supply at $2 to $3.50 per bushel. Lettuce continues from at 60 to 85 cents a dozen. Radishes, 20c dozen; mint, 75c per dozen; watercress, 75c dozen; parsley, $1 to $1.25 per bushel. Tomatoes are abundant and of good quality; the best bring 25 cents. Soft or windy fruit sell as low as 10 cents. Rhubarb 4 to 5 cents, will be much lower in a few days as outdoor supplies will be in. Mushrooms scarce at 75 cents to $1 pound.

NEW YORK, May 2.—On Saturday there was considerable urging to move the large stock on hand, facing Sunday and warmer weather. Lettuce from the south was sold a shade off, otherwise this item holds fairly steady. Cold frame product, heads, is $1.50 to $3.50 barrel; local rhubarb, $2 to $3 100 bunches.

TROUBLE WITH TOMATOES.

C. D. G.'s trouble in having a proportion of hollow or windy winter tomatoes as reported April 28, is quite a common one. There are few growers in the east who have not had some experience with it each year. Some kinds seem to be more predisposed to throw windy fruit than others, Eclipse, Frogmore and Chemin occurring to me at this time, the first named being the worst in this respect. With Rochford, Stirling Castle and Best of All we have had less trouble; the best winter "setters" seem the most prone to come soft.

We do not think the most careful artificial pollination will overcome this trouble, for we have seen crops hand fertilized each day quite badly affected. Too much root run, keeping the soil too moist and lack of bottom heat are more likely to be the causes. On plants grown in large boxes or pots we have never had any windy fruit; it has always been on plants grown in benches. For successful midwinter fruiting tomatoes must have a very restricted root run. They should either be in boxes or narrow raised benches. In solid beds success is very doubtful. We do not believe that bottom heat is necessary for a successful winter crop, but we find it helps quite a little. A very little steam or hot water below the benches will do the work.

There is little trouble with soft tomatoes except from December 1 to March 1. We would advise a night temperature not less than 60 degrees, one 5 degrees higher being better; dry atmosphere, greater root restriction and raised benches in all cases.

We can confidently recommend Stirling Castle as an A1 winter fruiter. It is not large, but sets freely and is with us very firm, a trifle better than Rochford's, which, however, is superior for late fall and early spring use.

In regard to melons, almost every grower has his pet variety, each claiming his to be the best. In addition to the English kinds we would suggest to C. D. G. the desirability of trying a good selection of Emerald Gem and Rocky Ford. These are fine-flavored varieties, of easier culture than the English ones, but rather more susceptible to disease. If, however, he can get clean stock and save seed from the same he will find them strictly first-class. We can send C. D. G. a few seeds of Emerald Gem guaranteed if he cares to try them.

W. N. CRAIG.

MARKET FOR TOMATOES.

Are there many hothouse tomatoes shipped to the Chicago market in winter? What was the average price per pound, wholesale, this winter, and what are they bringing now? J. W.

Earl Bros., who are among the largest handlers of greenhouse lettuce and cucumbers in Chicago, say that there is no regular supply of hothouse tomatoes in winter and hence no established market. What few hothouse tomatoes come in are usually sold direct to the big hotels and fashionable restaurants and do not go through the commission dealers' hands. Probably 40 to 50 cents a pound would be the ordinary price for a winter crop of good quality. The first regular supply on South Water street is in February, when the Florida tomatoes arrive. These are in six-basket cases and if sound, smooth and well colored the first offered fetch $3 to $4 per case, according to quality.

CUCUMBERS.

We have a range of connected houses, no partition walls, in which we have been growing lettuce. Since about February 1, as the side benches were cleared of lettuce we filled them with transplanted cucumber plants from pots. Some of my neighbors said I would have to get a swarm of bees or else hand pollinate the flowers to make the fruit set. But it don't look so. Some of the vines six weeks on the bench have made a growth of two feet or a little more, with about three or four pairs of leaves. They seem to have set plenty of fruit, if not too much. You can count six and eight little cucumbers on some of the axils. Is that all right? To me it looks like a good deal of fruit for a very little vine. Should any be pinched out? This is my first trial with cucumbers and I wouldn't like to lose the crop. It has been a hard winter and we need the money. M. H.

I don't think that it is necessary for M. H. to get a swarm of bees into his cucumber house, although they may be useful in pollinating and may be all right after you make their acquaintance; nevertheless they will assert their rights as owner of the house and before you get on visiting terms with them you are apt to get the worst of the argument if you trouble them much. Personally I am always more or less suspicious of their tail end, and like to keep as far away from them as possible. It does not take long to run over cucumber houses and set the flowers by hand and this is surer than the bee system.

I have always found it necessary to hand pollinate to insure a good set and if M. H. has a variety that will set in bunches of six or eight at the one axil it must be quite an acquisition unless it is a pickling variety and even on that I have never seen fruit set as he describes on such small vines. On the main stem of the vine it is very seldom that female flowers are produced. Male flowers will usually appear from every axil, and often in bunches, but it is on the lateral or side shoots that we have to depend for the female flowers and even here it is seldom that they are produced otherwise than singly. They will sometimes come in pairs but I have never seen them in bunches of six or eight. Even when two come at one axil I prefer to pinch one off, as they seldom both mature well.

The female flower has the small cucumber or seed vessel behind it and when the flower withers up and the little cucumber remains, the inexperienced grower might think the fruit was set, but a few days will undeceive him, when the fruits fail to swell, turn yellow and fall off.

White Spine is the most generally grown and best selling variety for market purposes and to insure proper fertilization hand pollination is the safest and only sure method. The long English frame varieties will swell without being fertilized and make just as good fruit but will be useless for seeding purposes, as without being fertilized the seed will not mature. Cucumbers are easily pollinated by hand, the flowers being large enough to be easily handled. The male flower should be picked off, the petals stripped from it to free the stamen, from which the pollen can be transferred by rubbing on the stigma of the female flower. Sufficient pollen is usually produced on one male flower to pollinate several of the female, but as a rule the male flowers are more freely produced than the female, hence it is safer to use plenty of pollen and insure fertilization.

It seems to me that there must be something wrong with the cultivation given by M. H.; probably his temperature is too low, as plants six weeks in the bench, even if they were very small at the time of planting from the pots, ought to have made more growth than two feet. A stunted growth might account for the female flowers being produced on the main stem when the plants were so small. It is a law of nature that a stunted or half starved plant will flower more freely than a plant that is in a healthy, free growing state. We often hear this expressed as a plant flowering itself to death, which is really what a plant will do in attempting to fulfill nature's law and reproduce itself before it finally succumbs.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The disagreeable weather conditions from April 23 to May 1 demoralized business considerably, quietness continuing all the week, the monotony being relieved only occasionally by small wedding decorations and orders for funeral work. About the best that can be said is that, while business was dull, stock shortened up and good stock did not accumulate. Last Saturday business took a spurt and stock sold up clean except on lilies, which will not move out at any reasonable figures. After last week's cloudy, wet and cold weather the present prospects are that a few bright days will bring quantities of stock.

In carnations and roses the quality is fine and prices remain the same as last reported. Pansies, sweet peas and yellow daisies are very plentiful. The demand for violets is limited but those arriving are still of good quality. Bulbous stock is very plentiful, with only an occasional heavy demand. Smilax is still scarce but asparagus strings and bunches are plentiful. The prices on ferns have taken a tumble; fine stock is offered now at $2 per 1,000.

Various Notes.

The long spell of rainy weather has made it impossible to do outdoor planting. May 3 and no carnations in the field!

Fred Burki smiles again, not a gas well with 200 pounds rock pressure this time, but the stork visited last Friday. It's a girl, and the cigars are on Fred. Bakerstown is truly a wonderful place, with the finest rose and carnation establishment in the country located there, and those fine babies make it quite an interesting place. Mrs. Burki and baby are doing well.

Your correspondent has received a copy of a beautiful floral album by E. C. Ludwig. The work is really a piece of art.

Last Friday, April 29, John W., son of Mr. and Mrs. William B. Hall, died at his parent's home in Allegheny. The craft extend their sincere sympathy to the bereaved family.

Clarke and Langhans, of the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co., were the happiest boys in Pittsburgh last Monday, for the sun shone brightly and business was good. This firm is receiving fine carnations and roses, also many novelties.

The Florists' Exchange is moving from the basement, which they now occupy, to a room on the second floor at 228 Diamond street.

The market gardeners and plantmen have a large stock of fine bedding plants and are awaiting favorable weather.

PACIFIC COAST.

GEO. W. OLIVER, of the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., is visiting the bulb growers of the Pacific coast and making notes of ways and means by which the department may assist in the development of the industry. The department is evidently sparing no pains to hasten the day when home-grown bulbs shall take the place of those now imported. Mr. Oliver has arranged to send some of the bulbs from his seedling lilies of the Harrisii type to growers in various localities on the Pacific coast, and it is hoped that at some one of these places the proper conditions will be found for the production of the bulbs on a large commercial scale. By starting with seedling stock and in virgin soil complete immunity from disease should be assured. The trade is certainly under heavy obligations to the Washington officials for their efforts in this direction.

THE PROBLEM OF HELP.

We are in the midst of our busy season and the same old trouble confronts all the nurserymen. Where can we get reliable help? With the large commercial places this problem has assumed startling proportions, and we are no nearer a solution than we have been for years past. In talking with one of the largest growers of nursery stock in California today he spoke as follows: "I have been actively engaged in business in this state for almost forty years, and I am 'up against it.' My planting season is here and I am making preparations to bud about twenty-five acres of young stock. I have not had much trouble during the wet weather we have just passed through to keep a sufficient force on hand, but now that the warm weather is here and fruit picking is about to begin my field force are dropping out one by one and I find them almost impossible to replace at this time. I suppose I will have to fall back on the 'Jap' proposition again and pay them about twice what they are worth, for truly if any man on earth deserves sympathy it is the grower who has to depend on the wily Japanese laborer. A few years ago it was possible to employ Chinese, but now that they do not come to this country in such numbers as they used to do we cannot get them in sufficient force to be of much service. The Chinaman is a good and faithful worker, but his cousin, the polite little 'Jap' is entirely too 'bright' to do any labor he is not forced to."

The gentleman whom I have just quoted is one of our well-known growers and his ideas will fit the case of the majority of the nurserymen in this state. We have "hobos" here in plenty, but they are not looking for work. We are paying from $2 to $2.50 for nine to ten hours' work. It seems that the majority of the eastern gardeners who come to this coast are of a roving disposition

THE OAK MOTH.

Prof. Warren T. Clark, head of the entomological department of the California State University, at Berkeley, has called the attention of the public to the fact that our most beautiful native tree, the California live oak, is in danger of extermination by the oak moth known as Phryginidia Californica. These destructive insects were first found here about five years ago and in a very limited area on our coast range mountains. They devour the leaves as fast as they grow and the tree finally dies. Two years ago they made their appearance in the neighborhood of Berkeley, where are located some of the finest specimens of the Quercus agrifolia. It was found that several of the insect eating parasites attacked and destroyed the moths so that for a time they were thought to be exterminated. This year, however, the moths have made their appearance in large numbers on many of the largest trees and in the absence of any other method of destroying them spraying the branches with Paris green has been resorted to. This appears to be effective but it is a tremendous amount of work. It is the intention of the authorities in the horticultural department at the university to pay great attention to the propagation and distribution of the parasites that feed on the oak moths as the preservation of our valuable native trees is a serious question at this time.

EVERETT, WASH.

Peterson, the carnation specialist, is still sending out some fine carnations and says he has had quite a profitable season.

La Groe & Sons have done a very satisfactory business in decorative plants and roses and are doubling their capacity and changing to short-roofed houses and beds on the ground, also adding a new forty horse-power boiler.

Wallmark reports a good store trade this winter and is building two more houses this summer.

Planting season is well on, but late for this section and only a few carnations are planted yet. The aster bugs are very numerous and seem to be waiting for something, with the intention of being on time. Last year I had a late bed of Upright White Branching and covered them with a white cloth nights and the bugs stayed on the cloth and did not seem to hurt the asters any after I covered them, so I thought they did the mischief in the night when roosting on the stems of the flowers. SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business has taken an upward jump during the past week and it has been noticed chiefly in funeral work, of which all the retailers have had a fair supply for several days. It seems to be off crop with a good many growers at present, and as a consequence there has been a good demand for any stock offered that was in good shape. White carnations are scarce, but of the red and pink sorts there are enough to go around. Good roses are likewise scarce and the best Beauties are selling today at $2.50 per dozen wholesale. Brides and Maids run from three dozen for a dollar up to $1 per dozen, which is a good price for this season of the year. Testout and Liberty bring 75 cents per dozen for the best, but I have seen no really good ones for the past week and there is much inquiry from the retailers for longer stemmed flowers of these varieties.

With lilies the Easter crop is well off and there is a scarcity at present. Many of the growers plant the Japanese-grown bulbs and bring them into flower without bottom heat, which brings them in in May and June. Outdoor common stock, such as marguerites, stocks, and candytuft, is becoming plentiful. Bride gladioli have arrived and sell at $2 per hundred spikes. Lilac has come and gone. We had a very short season of it this year, hardly three weeks all told. Our continued warm, rainy weather during February and the early part of March had the effect of forcing a splendid crop of flowers and bringing them on to a stage where they made splendid, large clusters, but did not open far enough to cut. A wave of very warm weather during the first weeks of April and the entire crop bloomed out in a few days, whereas we generally have lilac for six weeks at least.

PORTLAND, ORE.

It was not as much of a surprise to read of the snowstorms and cyclones which have recently visited the eastern and middle states as it was for us here in Oregon to experience, early in April, one week of real midsummer weather. Refreshing showers, with the mercury registering 90 degrees in the shade, caused trees and shrubbery to rapidly take on their summer attire and all vegetation may now be seen at its best. Everything in the horticultural line flourishes in our unsurpassed climate. The magnolias, azaleas, rhododendrons and a hundred other varieties of shrubs are now in full bloom and form a beautiful contrast to the glossy foliage and richly kept lawns.

There has been no great activity in the retail trade since Easter, just a steady demand for the best flowers, of which we have an abundance, light days of the past two weeks bringing out the blooms with a vengeance. Carnations are especially fine and from now until July we will have the heaviest cut of the year. The most popular varieties with us are Estelle, Enchantress, Prosperity and Flora Hill. Roses also took a sudden jump with the mercury and we are cutting fine crops of Golden Gate, Kaiserin, Liberty, Carnot and Testout on thirty-inch stems and the florists' displays are now veritable rose shows. And this is what the whole of Portland is preparing to be another year, for everybody is interested in planting roses to beautify their lawns for the coming fair. H. J. M.

ANCORA, N. J.—D. B. Martin has a bill for $700 for fertilizers sold Charles A. Nevinger, the florist, of this place, but the purchaser claims that the goods were not as represented and the matter has been taken to the supreme court at Camden.

The Market.

This week sees the market burdened with a very large oversupply. Receipts are heavy in all lines and considerably more than the legitimate demand can consume. There is, however, an active out-of-town trade and the aggregate of sales is satisfactory in comparison with those of the same period last year. An immense amount of stock is being moved, even if the average returns, brought down by the clean-up sales, are not as high as the growers would like to see. Local buying is still light and holds forth little promise of immediate improvement.

For about the first time this season long Beauties, and also the medium lengths, are accumulating in the wholesalers' ice boxes. Quality is very good and, in fact, one of the oldest wholesalers says that never in his experience has he seen a time at the beginning of May when the average quality of the rose crops was as good as at present. There is first grade stock for all requirements, and some to spare and with the low grade stuff it is simply a question of what the Greek salesmen will give. As one grower expresses it, "they are all carrying a roll" at present, for certainly this is the best money making period the street men have had this year. It is probable that rose cuts will soon show a decline as the replanting of the greenhouses is already underway at most of the establishments.

Carnation receipts are at full tide and very good stock indeed can be bought for 2 cents, with the cream commanding not over 3 cents. Clean-up sales are at from 15 to 20 cents a bunch. Probably the most burdensome item in the whole list is Harrisii lilies. These and callas are hardly wanted at any price, although the demand for funeral flowers continues good. There are large receipts of lily of the valley and it is comparatively slow sale. Violets are still coming in and of fair quality for the season, because the weather has continued cool. Prices range all the way from 5 to 25 cents a bunch. Arbutus is good and sells fairly, $1.50 to $1.75 per dozen bunches. There are again adequate supplies of green goods in all departments. The receipts of fancy ferns, last year's growth spring picked has resulted in depressing the market, although for the first-class cold storage stock as high as $4.50 per 1,000 is asked, as against $3 for the "snow birds."

STOLE CARNATION PLANTS.

The Chicago Carnation Co. is offering, through the Joliet newspapers, $100 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the man who broke into their greenhouse of Fiancee carnations at 2 a. m. Saturday, April 23. We are informed that the night man saw the thief coming out of the opening which he had made in the glass with a glass cutter, with an armful of plants, most of which he dropped in his haste to escape. He had evidently seen the night man approaching. It will go hard with him if he is caught, as this is not the first time the company has had new carnations stolen.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—Spring here is the most backward in years, no chance for planting, the outlook very discouraging, trade slow.

THE free seed distribution which began last fall has been completed. About 37,000,000 packages were sent out by the government.

B. T. HOYT, superintendent of the Hoyt Plant and Seed Co., St. Paul, was married April 7 to Miss Corinnie Bray, of Pentwater, Mich.

THROUGHOUT the middle west planting has begun in earnest. The effect is shown in the increased "fill in" orders that are being received at the jobbing centers.

ONE of the largest jobbers of onion sets is so well cleaned up that the retail department even sold its last pint, something which has not happened in years.

A. S. BEGG entered peas at the port of Port Huron, Mich., and the appraiser classed them as dutiable as seed peas. Begg protested, claiming that they were dutiable as dried peas, but the general appraisers overruled.

REPORTS in general for the week indicate that local trade with most of the retailers is much improved, and the weather and soil conditions favorable for a rush season of a week or two. They all say that it is rather late in coming, however.

CORN TO PLANT.

The question as to whether tips and butts of field corn should be discarded when shelling for seed purposes is likely to come up again. The corn breeders' associations throughout the west recommend the planting of the grains from the cob after the tip and butt grains have been taken off. Seedsmen hold that this recommendation is made simply for the reason that evener planting results from grains of equal size and not because of any superior producing quality inherent in such grains. It seems, however, that some of the farmers believe that a better and more uniform crop comes from such grains, and contend that this is the theory of the corn breeders. Information from practical corn growers upon this point would be a good thing.

AN EVERBEARING RHUBARB.

The Everbearing Crimson Winter rhubarb is one of the most valuable plants that has been introduced in this country. It is a precocious plant, bearing stems for cutting in nine months from seed, after which it is literally everbearing, not requiring any season of rest. It can be transplanted at any time and immediately begins growing. The stems are a beautiful crimson color, lacking the coarse fiber of the old variety, so that it can be prepared for cooking without stringing.

It requires about half as much sugar as is usual for seasoning, and the flavor is as delicate as that of strawberries.

When cut and dropped into boiling water, already sweetened, and slowly simmered till tender, it makes a beautiful dish, as tempting and as delicious as strawberries and almost as handsome. It has a clear, transparent, rich, pink syrup, with the soft reddish unbroken squares of the pulp, and one is not satisfied with one dish, but finds himself, like Oliver Twist, asking for "more."

People who have never cared for rhubarb generally, are delighted with this dainty and delicious new variety that can be brought into market in September and October and continued all through the winter and spring months when other fruit is scarce.

We have grown it now for two years and are more and more enthusiastic in our appreciations of its merits and its great value commercially. Luther Burbank introduced it in 1901, offering plants at $1.50 each. We quote from him: "For growing in California or the southern states, for shipping north or east it promises to be more profitable than anything the soil produces. Its fixed habit of winter growth makes it especially adapted for growing in greenhouses and under glass."

"GUARANTEED" VARIETIES.

Assistant Postmaster Rogers has a large quantity of government garden seeds for free distribution. He has given out a great quantity, and has more for those who apply. The county commissioners had a lot of packages of seed left over from the flood contribution and they have been given out. Mr. Rogers' garden seeds are the guaranteed government varieties.—Topeka, Kans., Journal.

SEEDS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Nearly 22,000 packages of assorted seeds have been distributed, reaching almost every province in the archipelago. These have included 137 varieties of American grown field and garden seeds, and it is pointed out that the requests have come largely from native farmers. It has been clearly demonstrated that many garden vegetables of American origin may be grown to perfection in the islands. A number of native fruits and vegetables are thought to be promising and worthy of experiment to determine the cost of culture, possibility of improvement by selection, etc.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

On the evening of May 2 the members of the trade in this city gave a farewell reception at the Kalamazoo House to J. J. Curran, formerly superintendent of the establishment of G. Van Bochove & Bro., who resigned April 30 and has removed to Elmira, N. Y., to become superintendent of the new establishment of the United States Cut Flower Co., which is building 100,000 feet of glass there this spring. It was a very pleasant session and the send off given Mr. Curran attested the high regard in which he is held by the craft here. He will be succeeded as foreman at Van Bochoves' by Wm. Van Peenen, who has been with the firm for twelve years. John Westveer who has been with the Dunkley Floral Co. for seventeen years, has resigned to take a position with the Van Bochoves.

Samuel Batson is building a fine addition to his dwelling.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

While Springfield is already known throughout the world as one of the largest rose-growing cities in the United States, at the plant of the Good & Reese Company and has many large greenhouses, it is destined within a short time to become more of a florists' center than ever.

C. C. Leedle and others are building large greenhouses in West State street, at the intersection of Plum street, and Charles Kriegbaum and Lewis Campbell are building eight new greenhouses in South Limestone street, near the corporation line. The Good & Reese Company is constructing large additions to its big plant in order to secure room for its greatly increased business.

ST. PAUL, MINN.—Dr. R. Schiffmann, the orchid grower, has just returned from his third trip to the Philippines with what he considers the finest lot of phalaenopsis which has ever reached the United States.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Treatment for Tender Stock.

Apropos of your correspondent's trouble with coleus dying and Mr. Scott's reply that insufficient heat might be the cause, I would like to say that it is very easy for men with large, well equipped plants to regulate heat to the requirements of the various houses, but for men like me, small country plantmen doing a local retail business in popular plants, a great variety with no great quantity of any one thing, it is a difficult matter to keep the temperature high enough for coleus and low enough for geraniums. Much may be done, however, with a little thoughtfulness. As we slack up on firing and the temperature falls to 50 degrees or lower at night, to pot off coleus, seedling salvias, etc., in a thoughtless manner, cold soil, cold pots and cold water, and expose them to full sun or cool draughts, means death to many of them. But warm the soil, pot them when the house is warm, in pots both moist and warm, water them lightly with decidedly warm water, cover them with paper and keep them covered night and day for about a week, when root action will have started, and the plants will be safe. They will not grow very fast but will make short-jointed stocky plants, large enough at the planting time if the man with the hose has brains. The same treatment for egg plants and peppers works well. This is not mere theory. I formerly lost at least half of my cuttings and tender seedlings; now I lose none.

J. THORNILEY.

OBITUARY.

John Kunzler.

At Rockford, Ill., April 24, John Kunzler died at the age of 85 years, after a brief illness of pneumonia. He had been a resident of Rockford many years and during the active period of his life was engaged in the florists' business.

John H. Wade.

John H. Wade, of Evansville, Ind., died April 25 after a long illness. He located in Evansville in 1866 and was a florist, on Fulton avenue. Mrs. Wade survives.

Wm. E. Lanning.

At Waterloo, Ia., Wm. E. Lanning, the well-known nurseryman in the neighboring township of Spring Creek, died April 25 of typhoid fever. He was born at Spring Creek in 1858 and had lived there all his life.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Department of Plant Registration.

Thomas Devoy & Son, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., submit for registration the zonale geranium, Telegraph, a seedling of 1900; parentage, E. G. Hill x The Wonder; flowers, single, two and one-half to three inches in diameter, deep orange-cerise, large and borne in immense compact clusters five to six and one-half inches across; foliage dark green with heavy zone; habit very robust; height two feet; a profuse blooming bedder.

WM. J. STEWART, Sec'y.

DEPRECIATION.

A gentleman named Varnum Frost, who hails from Middlesex County, Massachusetts, is quoted as follows in the Massachusetts Ploughman for April 16: "No property is more subject to depreciation than old greenhouses. The land would often be worth more without them. The greenhouse men will yet come to grief. Drop greenhouses like hot potatoes."

That would look as though Mr. Frost had already encountered the grief which he predicts will eventuate for us all, but grief is the due portion of one who lets his greenhouses, or any other buildings, depreciate to the point where "the land would be worth more without them."

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres., F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

VISITED CHICAGO.—P. M. Koster, of Koster & Co., Boskoop, Holland.

THE Westchester, Pa., nurseries are rapidly approaching the end of the season and are letting off most of the indiscriminate help employed during the rush.

THE call for hardy azaleas, rhododendrons and kalmias has been heavier than usual this season and large shipments have been made from the mountain districts of the south.

AT Albert Lea, Minn., O. M. Peterson and H. P. Olstad have established a nursery and planted nine acres of stock. Mr. Peterson has been with Clarence Wedge for several years.

THE nurseries dealing in decorative stock report a steady call for the trees and shrubs of odd foliage effect, the blood-leaved, variegated, etc., and those which show high autumnal colors.

MANY nurserymen are recommending the pin oak as the best tree for lawn or avenue planting where the conditions are not peculiarly unfavorable. Where it has been transplanted frequently in the nursery it is not difficult to establish.

THE United States Nursery Co., of Lula, Miss., is owned at Springfield, O. John M. Good, of the Good & Reese Co., being president. They are growing roses in large numbers, the soil and climate being especially adapted for the purpose. The manager is S. W. Crowell, who has recently been north and attended a dinner of the stockholders at Springfield, April 25.

ALL the nurseries in the vicinity of Boston report an exceptionally heavy spring demand. A large number of trees and shrubs were needed to replace stock killed by the severe winter. The cool weather has greatly assisted nurserymen in filling orders. Herbaceous perennials are also in strong demand. The call for California privet has dwindled, as the past two winters have cut this popular hedge plant to the ground. A good many are planting Ligustrum ibota in its place.

PEONIES.

I have a field of peonies which have been planted about eighteen years, and about half of them have never bloomed. I would like to ask, through the REVIEW, the advice of J. F. Rosenfield, the peony expert. A. S.

A few of the old varieties of peonies are shy bloomers, especially when planted in poor soil and not given enough room. Up-to-date propagators have discarded these poor bloomers. I should judge that A. S. has planted a mixed lot. If they were all of one variety they would all have flowers, unless very crowded. Peonies want plenty of room when cut flowers are wanted, especially for a permanent plantation of fifteen to twenty years. I would advise resetting the best roots next fall into well-prepared, rich soil, selecting only those that bloom this summer. If they are a strong-growing sort set them in rows five feet apart, with the plants three feet apart in the row. Early varieties, like officinalis, can be set in rows four feet apart, with the plants thirty inches apart, and give excellent results. If well cared for in this way they will all bloom finely for twenty years or more.

MOVING THE SALISBURIA.

I have just read an article on trees difficult to transplant by the venerable Mr. Scott, in which he places the beautiful maiden hair tree, or salisburia, as most difficult. Some years ago my attention was directed to a very large specimen that was roughly dug by house movers, presumably with an ax and crow bar; at least, the roots were nearly all cut off and the tree exposed to the trying weather of midsummer for a day or two before it was planted, a trying ordeal for any kind of tree, but it grew and is now quite a handsome tree. I am able to recall numerous instances where these trees have been planted, frequently under unfavorable conditions, as on school and public grounds, and I do not recall the failure of one of them. This seems very much at variance with Mr. Scott, but we value the tree very highly and wish it were more used in ornamental planting, particularly in place of the poorer trees of short duration, which are being so extensively used in the west. To any one who has seen the beautiful avenue of these salisburias near the horticultural buildings at Washington, they need no further recommendation.

The Market.

It is pleasant to report that business is now moving along at a very lively gate. For the first time since Easter the demand looks to be in a healthy state. Every one seems to be sharing in the general stir and all are in the market early to get the first pick of stock.

Prices on all kinds of stock have advanced a good many points, and there are good prospects of their going still higher, all together there is a large supply of stock, but it does not last long. Beauties are perhaps in heavier demand than anything else, and they are eagerly sought after. Good roses of all kinds do not have to wait long for a buyer, and even the second and third grades are not long left waiting.

Carnations also are doing fine. Their keeping qualities are greatly improved now that we are having warmer weather, and the growers are giving them more air. They are of fine quality, too. Bulbous stock is also selling well, but at low prices. Lilies are good property. Valley is in good demand. Violets are almost played out, but what few come in find quick sale. Smilax is very scarce and there are scarcely any ferns at all. But Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri are in better supply and most orders are being filled without much trouble.

Various Notes.

H. D. Edwards is busily engaged building a small conservatory back of his store, in which he will keep his stock of palms, ferns, etc.

Huntsman & Co. are raising a few seedling carnations, more as a recreation than anything else, but nevertheless they have several that are first-class. One white is especially good in all points.

J. W. Rodgers is about ready to begin work on a couple of new greenhouses. They will be 22 x 100 and will be used in growing carnations. Mr. Rodgers is now cutting some Lawsons that have remarkably long stems. In fact, all of his cut is of A1 quality.

One of McHugh's express wagons hit a telegraph pole in front of the store of Mrs. Garges, on Central avenue, and a box flew from the wagon and broke the large plate glass window.

WASHINGTON.

The question of licenses for florists having stands in the several city markets having been raised, A. Gude & Bro. applied for a ruling from the corporation counsel, who advises as follows:

"A person who sells flowers of his own raising in or around the several markets is a producer and should therefore not be required to procure a license so to do; and that a florist doing business in one of the markets should be required to procure a florists' license if he does not himself grow or raise the flowers which he sells, without regard to whether he already holds a florist's license authorizing him to deal in flowers at a designated place outside of the market, and that the tax of $5 provided for dealers of every description in the several markets does not apply to florists."

The condition of the market is very good, considering such a short while after Easter. Funeral work is deserving of special mention and all the stores have a good share of this kind of business. Carnations are in good demand, good stock bringing from 75 cents to $1.50 per dozen. Roses are also moving along at a good gait. Kaiserins, Bridesmaids, Carnots and Brides range about $1.50 to $3; Beauties $3 to $8. These are retail prices. Bulbous stock is fast disappearing, but good stock finds ready sale.

The florists of this city at last are to have a club. W. F. Gude sent out notices to all local florists for a meeting to be held May 4. The object of this meeting is to get the boys together, elect officers, determine upon a meeting place and start the ball rolling, after which the going will be easy and prosperous meetings will be assured.

Weather conditions prevailing do not furnish many indications of the approach of spring. With the exception of a few days, rough weather has prevailed ever since April 1 and at this writing does not show any sign of letting up, which, of course, makes it pretty hard on bedding plant growers. Usually quite a little stock is sold out at this time.

John D. Davidson has sailed for Porto Rico to engage in the shipping trade.

Captain Ernest is working hard with the bowling team to meet the Baltimore club on May 6, and a good time is assured. H. B. L.

BELLEVILLE, ILL.—Arthur Cowee will plant a very large quantity of gladioli on the farm of Louis F. Dintleman, from which he will draw for his World's Fair display.

CROMWELL, CONN.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Last Saturday's News printed a cut of a wheelbarrow load of Carnation Indianapolis with the following under the head, "Republicans and Carnations."

"When it is figured that one firm alone, Baur & Smith, who created the popular Indianapolis carnation, a child of the Mrs. Joost and the pretty Armazindy, sells about 500,000 blooms every year, and there are about forty other florists handling the carnation, it may easily be guessed that this city is somewhat favorably inclined toward the favorite flower of one who sleeps at Canton. That was a reverent love that President McKinley had for the carnation, and to him is largely due the present infatuation for the little flower.

"The coming republican conventions are to honor his memory by a wholesale distribution of the carnation in the convention hall and many a candidate hopes to strengthen his chances by putting his carnation instead of his finger in a delegate's button-hole."

THE FLORENCE HEATER.

One of the handsomest pieces of printing which has come to hand this season is the catalogue of the Columbia Heating Co., Chicago. The illustrations are perfect and the book contains much information of value on the subject of heating, either by steam or hot water. The structural idea in the boiler is unique and worthy of consideration by every greenhouse owner.

A Prosperous Florist is Never Idle

A glimpse into my houses will prove this; even enemies must admit that an unusual amount of work has been done to fill an establishment of so many houses which were emptied at Easter, with such an enormous stock of 150 000 choice bedding plants, an increase of 50 000 from last year, ready now for immediate shipment. Secure bargains for now and Decoration Day.

Geraniums—Le Pilot (double scarlet), Mme. Thibaut (double pink), La Favorite (double white), S. A. Nutt (double crimson), out of 4-inch pots, at $7.00 per 100.

Ageratums—(Blue), 4-inch pots, $6.00 per 100; 3-inch pots, $5.00 per 100.

Scarlet Sage—Best varieties only, 4-inch pots, $7.00 per 100; 3-inch pots, $5.00 per 100.

Begonia—Vernon and Erfordil, 4-inch pots, $7.00 per 100.

Heliotropes—(Blue), 4 inch pots $6.00 per 100.

Hermosa and Hybrid Roses—4-inch pots, $10.00 per 100.

Hardy or English Ivies—4-inch pots, $10.00 per 100; 3-inch, $7.00 per 100; 2½-inch, $5.00 per 100.

Periwinkle—(Vinea Variegata), very strong, 4-inch pots, $8.00 per 100.

Cobaea Scandens—4-inch, strong, $6.00 per 100.

Begonia—Tuberous rooted, 5½-inch pots, in bloom and bud, $2.50 per doz.

Fres. Carnot and other mixed varieties, very strong, 5½-inch pots, $2.00 per doz.

Fuchsias—5 inch pots, $1.50 per doz.

Daisies—Yellow and White, 5-inch pots, $2.00 per doz.

Honeysuckle—6-inch pots, $2.00 per doz.

Dracaena Indivisa and Latanias—6-7-inch pots, 50c each.

Hydrangea Otaksa—For out-door planting, 6-inch pots, $3.00 per doz.

Small plants, out of 2½-inch pots, $3.00 per doz.: Petunia (California Giant) and Inimitable Dwarf, Phlox Drummondii Gigantum, Nasturtium (Empress of India), 3-inch pots: Verbeneas, Sweet Alyssum (Little Gem), Lobelias, Cupheas, Tradescantia, Pyrethrum (Golden Feather), Alternantheras (red and yellow), Dusty Miller, Parlor Ivy and Coleus Verschaffeltii, Golden Bedder and Firebrand.

Don't forget that I am the Moonvine grower of the land; only A. W. Smith's Hybrid Moonvines (Ipomaea Noctiflora) is exclusively the one I grow, and is the only true Moonvine in America, as Mr. Smith has the world-wide reputation of growing the best Moonvine seed. Please bear in mind that this is no Morning Glory, like so many sell for Moonvines, but the pure, white, waxy Moonflowers, as large as saucers, 3-inch pots, $7.00 per 100; 4-inch $10.00 per 100, nicely staked up.

Watch "ad." for Araucarias, Palms and Ficus in about three weeks. Please send cash with orders. All goods travel at purchaser's risk. My best thanks to my customers for their liberal patronage at Easter.

THE VERBENA AS A BEDDER.

Twenty or thirty years ago the verbena as a bedding plant was second only to the pelargonium in popularity, but now it is far from common. In those days verbenas were almost entirely propagated by cuttings, and the plants were very subject to attacks by insects and, sometimes, in a damp or over-manured and grub-infested soil, were liable to disease. It is only in comparatively recent years that verbenas have been raised from seed, and such are models of health and vigor, making much more robust plants than cuttings, and producing as much blossom, the only drawback being that unless the seed is raised very early in the year they do not bloom so early as cuttings, which, like pelargoniums, may be showing for bloom even when planted out.

Verbenas need a fairly light, dry soil, which is rich in humus and the position must be a sunny one or they will produce more leaf than flower. The bed should be deeply dug and spent hotbed manure and leaf-mold freely added to it. Too much raw manure, like a wet, close soil, is apt to induce disease in a damp summer. The bed should be prepared early in the spring, though where bulbs or other spring flowers are grown on the bed this is not possible. The seed should be sown in heat in light, rich soil in February or March, preferably the former, and as soon as the plants are in their third leaf they should be pricked out round the sides of small pots, and after they have become established, kept close to the glass and allowed plenty of ventilation, so as to induce a good sturdy growth. By the end of March or beginning of April they should be nice little plants, ready to be potted off singly into small pots, in rich, sandy soil; and when they are well rooted in these pots they should be taken out of the house and put in a cold frame, near the glass, choosing genial weather to make the change, and afterwards putting a covering over the frame on cold nights.

By the middle of May they should be hardened off ready for planting out in the bed, care being taken that the sun does not shine on the plants the first day they are taken out of the frame, if they are at all succulent, and also that they do not suffer from drought at this stage of cramped root-room, as this has a stunting effect upon their after-growth. They should be planted out from one and a half to two feet apart, and as they grow the shoots should be securely pegged down over the bed until it is nicely covered, when they may be allowed to go their own way. On some parts of the bed there is almost certain to be a congestion of growth, and in such places the shoots should be thinned out, as more and finer flowers will be obtained from strong shoots thinly disposed than from a tangle of weak ones. The plants will stand a fair amount of drought if the bed is well covered, and should not be watered unless the drought is prolonged, watering encouraging the production of leaf rather than blossom.

Verbenas have a marvelous brilliancy and variety of color, and, however early they come into flower, they will last until the frost comes, so that the object should be to get them into bloom as early as possible. They come pretty true from seed, and various colors may be obtained separately. As the mixed seed usually produces an undue proportion of the purples and purple-blues, it is a good plan to sow a separate packet of the scarlet with white eye, the rose, and perhaps the pure white, as well as a packet of the mixed, and then the darker colors can be kept in their proper numerical proportion, as they are neither so showy nor so beautiful as the scarlet and the rose, the former especially being a marvel of floriferousness. If an edging to the bed is wanted, there is a beautiful little dwarf strain, growing only about six inches high and forming compact little bushes covered with bloom. For this purpose it is very effective, especially if the border is of one color only, either blood-red or snow-white.

If it is desired to propagate some special favorites, cuttings can either be taken in the early autumn, like pelargonium cuttings, and struck in heat, or else, at the approach of frost, the plants can be taken up, with a good ball of earth, and carefully potted, and kept in the house during the winter, the cuttings being made in March from the new shoots. A better way is to put a score of plants in large pots, at planting-out time, and grow them on till they bloom, retaining the favorites in pots through the summer and ensuing winter, and putting out the remainder on the borders.

Verbenas have one distinct advantage over many bedding plants in that, while beds of most plants seldom completely recover from a heavy storm in August, a day or two of sunshine seems to restore the verbenas to its former beauty. Being of a naturally low-growing character, and the main branches secured to the soil by pegs, they sustain much less damage from wind than most things do.—Gardeners' Magazine.

PELARGONIUMS FROM SEED.

It is not often that pelargoniums are raised from seed, and yet this is very easily done, and is very interesting work. Seed may easily be saved from one's own plants, and when this is done, of course, the finest varieties will be chosen for the seed parents. If the seed is saved from a plant standing by itself, or from plants on a bed of one sort only, the seedlings may be expected to come fairly true. It is more interesting, however, to get a packet of mixed seed from a good collection, as by this means a great variety will be obtained, and some which will be well worth perpetuating. It is sometimes stated in catalogues that plants raised from seed will bloom in eight or ten months from the time of sowing, so that it is obviously no use trying to get blossom the same year as the seed is sown.

I have found it a good plan, and one which gives the minimum of trouble in raising the plants, to sow the seed in pans in May or June. The pans may be put in a frame or greenhouse, and care should be taken to keep them shaded until the seedlings are up, as it is a somewhat treacherous time of the year to raise seeds if the weather should come very hot, owing to the danger of scorching. The seed should be sown very thinly, as the plants have large seed leaves. When the seedlings are in the fourth or fifth leaf they should be pricked out, putting about four in a forty-eight pot. When well rooted they may be kept outdoors till the autumn, by which time they will be vigorous plants six inches high. The tops may be pinched out, to make them bushy, if they show signs of becoming too leggy. They should be kept in a cool house, near the glass, through the winter, and not given much water, or they will make useless succulent growth. Early in the spring they should be each potted into sixty-sized pots, when, by the end of May, they will be fine plants for putting out in the open ground, or growing in pots. The foliage will vary from golden-green to greenish-black, and the blossom will probably vary as greatly. The markings on the leaves will be much deeper, and more clearly defined the second season than the first, unless their first season happens to be a very hot and dry one.

The plants should not be given rich soil, as the tendency of seedlings is to grow more rankly than cuttings do. They will not bloom so freely as cuttings the first part of the season, but will improve later. Of course, the plants raised from cuttings from these seedlings will have the restricted growth and floriferousness of plants raised in the ordinary way.—Gardeners' Magazine.

HERE IS A BUSINESS BOOK FOR BUSINESS MEN

NO SCIENCE BUT LOTS OF PRACTICAL COMMON SENSE.

It don't tell you the botanical classification but it does tell you how to produce marketable plants and cut flowers in the best and cheapest way.

It don't list every plant in cultivation but it does tell you just what you want to know about every plant that there is any money in for a Commercial Florist.

The articles are arranged alphabetically so that when you want to see what Mr. Scott says about Cannas you turn to the Cs and in an instant you have it.

FLORISTS' PUBLISHING CO.

Caxton Building, CHICAGO.

The book treats of over 200 subjects and is freely illustrated with fine half-tone engravings.

It is a book that you need in your business just as you need any other useful labor and money saving implement or device.

The price is $5.00, carriage prepaid.

If you have not already obtained a copy of this book order one now.

If you cannot spare the full price at once, write us for our monthly payment offer.

TO-BAK-INE

FUMIGATING PAPER.

SCARBOROUGH, N. Y., February 3, 1904.
 "We wish to say that your To-Bak-Ine Fumigating Paper is the most satisfactory agent for the destruction of Green fly that has ever been brought to our notice. It is clean, quickly applied and effective. As you know, we have been heavy buyers of this product, all of which has been used in our own greenhouses. And as 'actions speak louder than words' we think no further recommendation on our part is necessary."

WATER HEATING.

I have two greenhouses, 16x50 feet, nine feet to ridge, sides four feet and boarded. Glass in west end, work shed protecting the east. Am thinking of heating with a No. 4 Economic hot water boiler. Have 700 feet of 1-inch pipe that I want to use and would stand the boiler near the surface of the ground because of water in the pit. With a 2-inch flow under the ridge how many 1-inch returns will I need and should they be partly under the middle bench or all under the side benches. G. N.

Your houses require a boiler with at least eighty feet of heating surface. If the No. 4 boiler mentioned does not have this amount of heating surface, do not use it, but get one that has even more. I do not consider it economical or wise to use 1-inch pipe in a hot water system. It is quite satisfactory with steam, but nothing smaller than 1 1/4-inch should be used for hot water. If you wish to use 1-inch pipe you should provide a 2-inch flow pipe, or riser, under the ridge and sixteen returns under the benches. With 1 1/4-inch pipe it will require thirteen returns, and with 2-inch pipe eleven, to maintain a temperature of 60 degrees with the water at 180 degrees during cold weather. L. C. C.

RICHMOND, VA.—The heavy frost at the end of April caused a very heavy loss to many of those in the trade here. Outdoor planting was under way and the frost was sufficient to practically ruin all stock which had been put outside. Peonies and lilacs were badly injured.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—H. M. Altick, of Dayton, O., has been in town in the interests of the McKinley Memorial Fund, for the S. A. F. committee on which he is chairman. He stated that he thinks the committee will be able to raise $20,000 for the McKinley memorial.

Superior Boilers Are Good Boilers.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers, no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettig.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Frost and Spring Work.

Some years, but not in every one, we get a frost that hurts late in May. Two years ago, about May 17, it made our young carnations look like bleached sea-kale and yet they soon caught up with those which escaped the frost. While in western New York and Pennsylvania it would be folly to put out in the ground before the end of May any plants that are much injured by the slightest frost, such as coleus, heliotropes and dahlias, yet there are several important plants that it is of the greatest advantage to get out and growing before you are rushed to death with your customers' flower beds. It don't matter how much help you have, if you can't get these out by the 20th of the month you will have no more chance to do it till June 15, for all hands and the cook will be busy planting and filling orders for your patrons. There are a lot of free-growing bedding plants that there need be no worry over, because a very few plants put out by the Fourth of July will give you all the cuttings you want in the fall, such as salvias, ageratum, etc.

The Geraniums for Stock.

What I consider two very important plants are the zonale geranium and the canna. Not only should they go out and be rooting (a little injury to their tops won't hurt if frost does come) but if you don't select good strong plants, particularly of the geraniums, you will have only the rank and shabby plants to give you the cuttings in the fall. Get them out, and lots of them. They need not be the largest plants, or most in flower, but they should be healthy and vigorous if you expect healthy cuttings in the fall.

Don't plant them in your own grounds as closely as you would in a flower bed. The more air and light around the plants the stouter and better the cuttings in September. And while you are at it put out the roseleaf and other scented geraniums, also a good assortment of the ivy-leaved as well as the variegated varieties. You can't increase geraniums a hundred fold, as you can many plants, and you must have good stock.

People who sell on the market may want a great variety, while those whose business is filling flower beds and vases can get along with but a very limited number of sorts. We are always sold out of S. A. Nutt, Le Soleil, deep scarlet, Alphonse Ricard, bright scarlet, and, above all, the beautiful semi-double pink Mrs. Frances Perkins. Jean Viaud is a beautiful geranium for Decoration day, but we have not found it a good bedder. There is nothing new about the above few, but they are standards.

The Best Cannas.

There is no likelihood of there being any decline in the popularity of the canna and there is nothing as good or as cheap as having your own stock. If you are short, buy now and don't wait till the wholesale firms have only poor stuff left. Don't forget Black Beauty if you want rich, purple bronze foliage. In scarlet flowered Tarrytown is grand and so are The Express and President McKinley. Souvenir de Antoine Crozy and Queen Charlotte are both fine in the scarlet and yellow section. Buttercup is a pure yellow, without speck of any other shade or color. Dwarf Florence Vaughan is good in its class, yellow mottled with red. President Cleveland is a very distinct orange scarlet, and there are many others, as well as some fine novelties. Now, with these important plants for your own stock don't be afraid of some chilly nights. You will save dollars and lots of worry by having good big roots of these next fall.

Gloxinias.

If you are growing gloxinias, and they are a most beautiful flower as well as an excellent house plant, they will now be ready to put into their last shift a 5 or 6-inch pot. Use a third of leaf mold and put some drainage in the pots. These plants are often ruined by a rust on their leaves. They by no means want to be carelessly watered and yet if the soil is allowed to become dry the flowers quickly wilt and that's the end of them. They don't want dense shade, neither do they like too bright a sun. It pays to raise each plant on an inverted 5-inch pot. An adjustable shade, like cheesecloth, to be used on bright days would be the ideal treatment.

And that brings us to another plant that will be important in our business next Christmas.

The Cyclamen.

We have had such satisfactory results with cyclamen the past few years, keeping them entirely indoors, that we are not likely to try the summer hotbed again. We saw several most promising batches of cyclamen go to the dogs last fall, just about flowering time. It is, I believe, a mite that ruins them; anyway it's mighty in destructiveness to flower and foliage of these beautiful greenhouse plants. Now that the plants are in 3-inch pots they should have tobacco stems between the pots and frequently renewed. It will help greatly to keep down aphids and it may hold off the microscopical mite. If any plant pays to shade from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. on bright days, and no shade other hours and dull days, it is the cyclamen, and every bright morning a light spraying. If I were going to prescribe any antidote for this mite on the cyclamen, I should say that a syringing once in two weeks with a solution of Gishurst's compound would be the thing.

Gladioli.

I suppose you have put in your first planting of gladioli; it ought to be in. It seems to me that the late crops of these sold much better than the early ones, but don't get so late that frost nips them before they are out. Plant some every two weeks till the end of June.

Cochet Roses.

Have you ever grown a large planting of Cochet roses? Both the pink and white are grand summer roses. Yet the pink is most useful because we have the splendid Kaiserin Augusta Victoria in our houses in the summer time. The Cochet is not hardy with us without lots of protection, but it will pay for that and a planting made now will give you lots of bloom this summer and fall and next summer thousands of buds when your Bridesmaids are poor little things or non-existent. A bed of these roses should not be out of the reach of the hose or they will do little good during a hot, dry spell.

Dahlias.

Dahlias are sure to be in demand this fall and some free-flowering varieties should be planted. A supposed expert told me once that in the east they did not plant dahlias till after the Fourth of July. It may be so, but that would be too late for us. I just call to mind that I remember a Scotch dahlia enthusiast propagating from green cuttings in April, planting out at the end of May and on July 1 exhibiting at Hamilton, Ont., twenty-four splendid show varieties. That was high cultivation. The man who grows fifty acres, or even one acre, could not afford to put the labor on them. The dahlia wants a deep, rich soil, plenty of water and a cool climate. That is why they give such splendid blooms late in the season, or as long as frost keeps off. Many of the so-called show varieties are gorgeous, exquisite in color markings and form, yet they are not what your customers will want as cut flowers. The cactus, the single and the pompon sections, above all the cactus varieties, is what the public wants for cut flowers.

Fuchsias.

We used to grow fuchsias well once. I have sold many a plant of old Elm City at $1.50 each. Now the majority of fuchsias are sold for $1.50 per dozen or less. Not getting the proper start is often the cause of a scrubby lot of fuchsias. A few of the left-over, poor and latest propagated plants are saved to give you cuttings during winter. That is all wrong. One or two of the earliest and strongest plants of each variety should now be selected and marked "sold." Plants that are a good size now will ripen wood during summer and with a few weeks' rest in the fall, and a trimming back, will give you stout, vigorous cuttings that will want to grow and not prematurely flower. Now is the time to lay the foundation for next year's fuchsias.

Clematis Paniculata.

There is a brisk demand this year for the lovely Clematis paniculata. Plant all you can of it. It is so hardy, so sure to be a success, so fine in every way, that your customers will return in a year or two and bless you. You can buy it at a very moderate price and make a good profit.

About Privets.

We are just learning what a terrible winter we have passed through. Many flowering shrubs have been killed back that have stood uninjured for several years. But I am not going into that now, with one exception, viz., the California privet. It is badly killed in many places and this is not the first winter that it has suffered. The so-called English privet, Ligustrum vulgaris, is the hedge shrub for our climate. It is perfectly hardy and I am inclined to think, although not such a shining, glossy foliage as the Californian, it makes a more dense, compact hedge and does not show the effect of the shears as much. If I mistake not, those wonderful hedges that are so admirably cared for by real gardeners at Newport are the English and not the California privet.

I have been mildly criticised about my advice to defer planting so-called evergreens (properly conifers) till the end of May or until the young growth starts. It is possible that in New Jersey and southward it may be better to plant earlier, or as soon as the ground is workable, but I still think the northern nurserymen will agree with me on this important question.

I enjoyed the pleasant and almost flattering criticism, except that one correspondent referred to me as the "venerable Mr. S." I don't think that gentleman and I ever met. I am not yet venerable; only a sprouting Araucaria imbricata and won't be ready to plant for several seasons.

take your color box and mix a red and a blue and the product will be purple. That is just what has been done in the violets.

Next examine a Perle rose in the same way as you have done the violet, except that daylight will serve our purpose. You will say, at first glance, that the Perle rose is a soft yellow. But let us see. Look sharply into the heart of a half blown bud and you are blind to color if you cannot see in among the yellow petals rich wavy red lines reflected back and forth. Then turn a leaf of the Perle foliage wrong side up and you will find almost more red than any other color. The red is laid on in thick lines along the veining and the base of each leaflet. We fail to find any blue in the Perle rose as we did in the violet, but we have found red in both flowers, and so we must conclude that if the artist is correct in calling this a fine combination, it must be the red that establishes the harmony.

Try another example. This time it will be Bridesmaid roses and marguerites. Examine the Bridesmaid rose in the same way as the Perle. You will say at once that the pink, which names the rose, is the principal color. So it is, but the pink is not the only color. There are yellow stamens and yellow blotches on both the inside and outside of the petals, especially toward the bases of the petals. Occasionally you will see a tiny thread of red in the veining of the petals, as well as green intermingled. It will not be difficult to discover the yellow in the marguerites. Here is the key to the harmony. No critic can dispute our authority for this combination.

Here are some more interesting and harmonious combinations which can be made under the same law of color: Perle roses with bronze galax leaves; Perle roses with Morning Glory carnations; Narcissus poeticus with Bridesmaid roses; American Beauty roses with white lilacs; delicate salmon-colored sweet peas with the dark, rich purples; the dull browns in dahlias and zinnias with the yellows and creams in the same flowers.

While many yellows and crimsons make fine combinations, there are likewise yellows and crimsons that fight.

THE RETAIL

COLOR HINTS.—I.

When an artist takes up a certain study with a box of paints at hand and the landscape before him, he can scarcely ever touch his brush to a color in the box and lay it pure on the canvas. The truer his eye, the more mixing and blending and toning he must do in order to reproduce the harmony of color that nature has painted in the scene which he assumes to copy. A real artist uses few colors, but many mixtures of his own make. An untrained eye could never analyze the product, nor trace the pure colors in the finished picture.

But we have our pictures already colored in marvelous beauty and form. Each flower we handle is a picture of itself. It is ours to group these pictures and to make the settings and combinations of flowers harmonious. Our work is largely selective and analytical. But there is much in each of these. I was astonished to hear a woman of taste and style in dress once remark: "All kinds of flowers look well together!" A jumble of all colors of fabrics couldn't be worse than a hit and miss collection of flowers.

Remembering that there is scarcely a flower to be found which is composed of a pure, that is, unmixed color, we should know why certain combinations of flowers are good and correct, and why certain others are vile, aside from mere personal taste or fancy, which is not always to be trusted. This is the principle of color combination which we shall consider in today's chapter.

As a preliminary study we will consider a combination which any artist will admire and recommend. It is that of the coloring found in the Perle rose and English violet. What is the reason that this combination is so excellent? Why is it so pleasing to the eye? Let us see the reason, and find out if the same principle can be applied to other combinations, and be a guide in all, or many color combinations.

There are two ways of proving this to one's satisfaction and profit. Now, before there can be harmony between two persons there must be found something in common between them, that is, some of the same qualities in each. It is precisely the same in the color world. Get a little box of water color such as the children use in school, and actually perform the operation of mixing the colors which we shall find in the English violet. But somebody will say, "I have no time for such experiments." If you are not interested to this extent, here is another way of arriving at the same result:

Glance at a bunch of violets in ordinary daylight and you will say they are purple, of course. Now look at the same bunch of violets by artificial light, and they will not look as purple as they did before. They will appear quite red. Whether the blue has disappeared partly or the red has been strengthened is not so much what concerns us as that our violets now appear red. Then in daylight again look well into the heart of the flower and see the streaks of red down toward the base of the petals. Now Residence of J. F. Wilcox, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Decorations for the Reception Given by Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Wilcox at Their New Home in Council Bluffs, Iowa.

The Liberty rose in its prime blends beautifully with the soft yellow of the Perle rose or Narcissus incomparabilis, but should never be placed near yellow after it has begun to fade and develop the purple. It is always best in combining two colors to select one strong color and one delicate color, for instance, in the combination mentioned above of the Liberty and Perle rose, where the red is strong and the yellow soft. It would be poor taste to use as strong a yellow as is found in the Narcissus Von Sion. Kaiserin or Bride roses with the Von Sions is an excellent combination.

After having practiced this color analysis a few times you will naturally fall into the habit of trying to detect the component colors of the flowers which you handle day by day. Your eye will train itself correctly, combinations will suggest themselves to you and you will be able to test them by the above principle.

GERTRUDE BLAIR.

THE WILCOX DECORATIONS.

J. F. Wilcox, of Council Bluffs, Ia., built a new home last summer, adjoining his greenhouses, and to open it to their friends in that city Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox gave a large reception. To show his very many friends in the trade how comfortable Mr. Wilcox is domiciled we present in this issue four views, from photographs, three of which show the rooms as decorated for the formal reception.

Every room in the house was embellished with plants and cut flowers, even to the dancing, billiard and card rooms on the upper floor. In the reception hall were groups of palms and festoons of asparagus, while Bride and Meteor roses were used above the doorways and about the console. In the dining room were palms, white chrysanthemums and poinsettias. A canopy of green and red flowers made a corner for the punch bowl. Lawson carnations were used in the library and Beauty roses in the music room. The dining room was curtailed from the hall by portieres of asparagus. There was a handsome cut glass vase of Beauties on the table and other roses on the sideboard. On the upper floors the decorations were equally elaborate, a different flower being used in each room, La France roses in one, Meteor in another, Liberty in a third, Beauties in a fourth, and so on. Plants were largely used in the billiard and ball rooms. Each of the ladies assisting Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox in receiving either carried Beauties or wore corsages of violets.

ROSES.

Planting the Young Stock.

With the benches filled with soil and the planting plans complete, the first proceeding should be to determine the distance between the plants, and the arrangement of the same. The most common method, and I think the best, is to run the lines diagonally across the bench. This is termed "staggering" and, while admitting a freer circulation of air among the foliage than if the lines are run at right angles to the bench, it also facilitates syringing, staking and tying.

The usual distance between plants of such varieties as Bride and Bridesmaid is fifteen inches each way, allowing a root area of 225 inches, which in good soils is little enough. I am aware that many good growers prefer giving them less, but after many years experimenting in many different classes of soil I find this to be the most profitable when quality and quantity are considered. Ivory and Golden Gate succeed best when given even more space than this. Beauties should have at least 324 inches of root area.

Previous to turning the plants out of the pots they should be well watered, so that they may withstand the drying heat to which they will be exposed during the process of planting. Turn the plants carefully out of the pots, disturbing the balls as little as possible, even the removal of the drainage having a bad effect and should be avoided. The ball should be placed in the bench just about as deep as will afford a slight covering and no more. A slight depression should be left around the ball to receive the water and keep it from spreading.

As soon after planting as possible the plants should be watered, giving each individual plant a thorough soaking. This individual watering should be continued during the first ten or fifteen days, syringing twice daily during bright sunshine, by which time root action will be commenced and weeds will be plentiful. The surface should then be ruffled and the whole surface given a good watering.

Free ventilation and persistent cultivation must now be practiced, as this is the very foundation of success. Weeds are usually looked upon as a pest because work is required to remove them. I look upon them as a blessing in disguise, for were it not for weeds many rose benches would get but scant attention in cultivation.

The benches in the stock house, from which the young plants have been removed, should still receive the same attention at watering time, so that they may retain the necessary amount of moisture and so keep the house balanced. The paths should also be sprinkled frequently during hot weather, so that the young plants may not suffer. The roots being now pressed against the sides of the pots are easily damaged.

RIBES.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Field Planting.

We are having right now a good example of the value of the sidehill plow, and using it each day to plow what we can plant that day. Since we began planting, on April 29, we have not had a rain. If we had plowed our whole carnation field, or even half of it, at the start we would have had to stop planting several days ago, and the plants put out four or five days after the plowing would be suffering badly by this time. But as it is, we set every plant in nice, mellow, moist soil and all took hold immediately and none is suffering in the least, at least not more than all other vegetation which has been growing all spring. Unless it rains and the soil gets too wet we will not need to stop before we are through, as the plow will turn up moist soil without any rain for a long time yet. Really, I don't see how a florist can get along without one of these plows.

Shading.

I notice on some greenhouses a very heavy shade, and I just want to warn you not to overdo it. Too much shade is as bad as none at all, and really, I would prefer none at all. All you want is to break the strong rays of the sun during the middle of the day. This is not now so much to keep the house cool as it is to keep the sun from bleaching all the color out of the blooms. The plants would prefer the full sun and if the shade is too heavy they will grow soft and the blooms will lack in substance.

Give them plenty of water at the roots, but of course do not get the soil into a soggy condition. Here is where the solid beds save you much valuable time during these spring and early summer months. With one-half the amount of watering they will maintain a more uniform degree of moisture than the benches. Give all the ventilation you can at all times to keep the houses cool and airy.

The June Crop.

Look right after the disbudding these days, as those are the buds that will give you your blooms next month, and it will have a great effect on the quality of your blooms when they open up. Good blooms are worth more during June than they are right now, and it will pay you well to do all you can toward helping the quality.

A. F. J. BAUR.

INDOOR SUMMER CULTURE.

I am very much interested in the matter of growing carnations indoors all summer and would like to ask if they should be shaded. My houses are not as large or cool as those advocated by Mr. Fisher, being but 20x70, connected, with side ventilation on only one, but with doors at each end of all three houses. I am growing Hill, Higinbotham, Scott, Harry Fenn, Enchantress and Joost. I have my Enchantress in 5-inch pots and had thought of plunging the pots outside to avoid the setback at benching time.

J. L. D.

Carnations that are growing inside the houses all summer should have no shade over them, but should have all the sun and ventilation you can give them. In fact, you should make the conditions just as near outdoors as you can, except that you keep control over the water supply, etc. You want to encourage a slow, solid growth to produce short, bushy plants like you get in the field, if possible. If you shade them the plants will grow soft, long-jointed and straggly, which you should do all you can to avoid if you hope to meet with success.

I would not plant carnations in the field from 5-inch pots. By fall they would be so large and grassy that you would have trouble in getting them to take hold when replanted. By all means plant those inside now. If you plunged the pots outside you would have to water them regularly, and I doubt if you would gain much by it.

The varieties you mention all transplant readily, and personally I would prefer planting them in the field and lift them when they have grown into good average plants. My advice to you would be to plant this spring the house which has the most ventilation and see how you succeed; then if you are satisfied that it is the method for you to follow, you can adopt it altogether in the future. Try some of each variety to find out which like that method best. You will find that some varieties will do much better under this method, while others will do best under the field culture method. We would not grow Mrs. Lawson any other way but inside, and I understand it is the proper way to grow Adonis successfully.

CALCEOLARIAS.

[The following is a paper read before the Tarrytown Horticultural Society, April 26, by William Scott, gardener for Joseph Eastman, Tarrytown, N. Y.]

It seems to me a great pity that the calceolaria is not more generally grown. This is no doubt partly due to the fragile nature of the plants, which makes them a poor subject for shipping, either as plants or cut flowers, and partly due to their not being more widely known, for they possess a richness of coloring and fascinating beauty that cannot fail to appeal to all true flower lovers. If they are used for greenhouse or home decoration, the plants, if not kept too warm, will retain their beauty for weeks and the flowers stand well as a cutting subject.

The best time for sowing the seed is from the first to the middle of July. I use well-drained seed pans filled with a light sandy compost, that on top being finely sifted. I give a good watering and allow the water to drain off before sowing the seeds. These being very fine, little or no covering of soil is required, but they should have the protection of a pane of glass over the pan. Subsequent waterings are given by immersing the pans, allowing the water to be drawn slowly from below. This does away from the necessity of watering from the top, which would more or less disturb the seeds, no matter how fine a rose was used. I do not believe in the custom of setting the pans in saucers of water, as it tends to keep the soil too wet and increases the danger of damping, to which the little seedlings are very susceptible.

After germination has taken place and the seedlings are well up, the glass should be gradually removed to allow freedom of air. Shade, however, is most essential, as sunshine must never be allowed to strike the plants in their small state, or it will work havoc in the shortest of time. The little seedlings should be pricked off as soon as they are large enough to handle, especially if damping off should make its appearance. The same compost as that in which the seeds were sown will be the best for this purpose and either shallow flats or seed pans used for a receptacle. The distance apart had better be an inch each way; this will allow them ample room in which to attain sufficient size for the first potting.

For this potting thumb pots should be employed and a rather richer soil than that formerly used. A compost of two parts old sod and one part leaf mold, sharp sand and finely sifted, dry cow manure in about equal parts, will make a very suitable soil. If the soil is of a stiff, retentive nature, the proportion of soil should be less and dry horse manure substituted for the other, as this will considerably help to make the compost more free. The principal aim is to secure a soil that will quickly drain off and obviate the danger of stagnation, as if the plants once get overwatered and sour it is very hard to get them back into perfect health.

This compost will suit for subsequent pottings, which should be given as soon as the plants require it. They should never be allowed by any means to become pot-bound. Three or more shifts will be necessary, viz.: 3½, 5 and 7-inch pots, this last being quite large enough to mature good-sized plants. But if larger plants are desired, the strongest may be moved into either 8 or 9-inch pots.

Regarding the atmospheric conditions, these should be kept rather moist, but not overcharged, and the temperature should be as low as can possibly be procured through the summer and fall months. In their winter quarters the temperature should not exceed 40 degrees by night, with a raise of from 10 to 15 degrees by day during bright weather.

More or less shade is necessary, especially during their flowering period, and when the sun begins to brighten in spring. The leaves being of a soft texture are easily flagged if subjected to the direct rays of the sun.

Great care must be exercised in regard to watering, the extreme softness of the roots making them very susceptible to an over-supply, while, on the other hand, excessive dryness is just as harmful.

The most troublesome insect enemy is the greenfly, to avert which tobacco stems should be freely spread around the bench where the plants are standing, these being renewed as frequently as occasion demands, which is as soon as the stems lose their strength. If greenflies are allowed to get a foothold they will quickly work irreparable damage. Should they make their appearance light smokings may be resorted to, but heavy smoking is apt to scorch the foliage. Light feeding may be given after the flowering pots are well filled with roots and the flower stems are well up, but should be discontinued after the flowers begin to open or damping may result.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

The Chrysanthemum Manual.

Among the men who hold places of high regard in the esteem of their fellow craftsmen, few are personally more popular than Elmer D. Smith, who now comes forward with Smith's Chrysanthemum Manual, the first American publication of value, dealing exclusively with this subject. The writer's large acquaintance in the trade would assure for his work a wide reading were he discussing any subject, and on the plant to the improvement of which he has devoted the best years of a studious life, he is sure of a consideration which would only be given a voice of recognized authority.

Following the fashion which leads authors to set forth their reasons for writing, Mr. Smith says by way of introduction:

During the past twenty years I have devoted much time and energy to the cultivation and improvement of the Chrysanthemum and have received many inquiries from those desirous of gaining knowledge on this subject. Confronted with these facts, and realizing the urgent need for a complete as well as a practical treatise, at a price within the reach of all, I make this attempt in compliance with these demands.

Mr. Smith then proceeds to set forth as concisely as may be all the details pertaining to chrysanthemum culture, beginning with stock plants and their care and treating the many features of the work of the grower, through each stage of development, to the final shipment, marketing or exhibition of the plants or cut blooms.

The cultural directions for both plants and cut flowers are set forth in clear and comprehensive manner, with evident intent to present a plain course of procedure for those who are beginners in the work, but it seems that at several points the desire for brevity has led to an economy of words which would have been well spent in going a little farther into detail. Indeed, we are of the opinion that with the material in hand the author might well have expanded his work into a much more pretentious volume, although had he done so he would, possibly, have added little to the interest with which his book would have been received by the trade.

To the trade grower the value of the work will lie in the bits of personal opinion, based on years of experience, which are scattered through the pages, which leads to the probability that the chapter on "Seedlings and Sports" will be the most closely read of all, for Mr. Smith has to his credit as many meritorious introductions as any American grower. He says that for hybridizing he finds the single-stemmed plants in 4-inch pots best for the purpose, grown naturally without an abundance of nourishment. Efforts to obtain seed from flowers grown for exhibition have in nearly every case been fruitless. The crosses which give but few seeds generally produce the best seedlings.

It has been reported that flowers sometimes sport in form, that is, give a flower of entirely different form from that originally possessed, such as an incurved flower sporting to reflexed form. Such cases are, at least, few and far between; in fact, we are inclined to disbelieve that such changes have really taken place. Cultural conditions often change the form of flowers materially, also buds selected, and doubtless some of the cases reported are simply due to these causes.

There is a practical chapter on packing plants for shipment and others on diseases, insects, fertilizers, exhibitions, etc., the whole illustrated with eighteen half-tones and etchings. The work is completely indexed and any paragraph may be found in a moment.

The "price within the reach of all" at which Mr. Smith decided to sell his pamphlet is 25 cents. It is worth so many times that sum to everyone who has any interest whatever in the chrysanthemum that the sale is sure to be large. Send 25 cents in coin or postage stamps to the REVIEW and the Chrysanthemum Manual will be sent by mail, prepaid.

Annual Flowering Plants.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture has issued, as Farmers' Bulletin No. 195, a very practical handbook by L. C. Corbett, horticulturist in the Bureau of Plant Industry. The pamphlet is entitled "Annual Flowering Plants" and describes the cultivation and uses of these plants in an eminently practical and interesting manner. While much of the matter is of the most elementary character, yet it is just such information, advice and instruction as is asked of a florist a dozen times a day at the planting season.

There are chapters of general advice on the treatment of small places, on the use of plants about a dwelling, on school gardens, on the use and construction of hotbeds, cold frames, etc., which add much to the popular value of the work.

In sending out this bulletin the Department has made use of the far-reaching power of the daily and weekly newspapers, which have been supplied with brief reviews and which have aided materially in putting the pamphlet in the hands of a large number of interested readers, where it will do much to point out the way to success and foster the love for the flower garden.

Bulletin 195 is sent free on application to the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

LEAF-MOLD IN ORCHID CULTURE

We read with interest your quotation from the Gardeners' Magazine in relation to orchid culture in leaf-mold. Having had considerable experience during the past three years with orchids in this material, and having very carefully noted its effects on the various batches of plants tried in it, we venture to give you our impressions. We do not suppose that this question will interest a large proportion of your readers, but the number of orchid cultivators, particularly on private places, steadily increases and some day orchids will be more of a commercial factor than they are today. If, therefore, this new leaf compost is going to revolutionize their culture, facilitate the raising of seedlings and, in fact, do away with some of the harassing uncertainties which now beset the growers of these beautiful plants, by all means let us adopt it, but—beware lest the new culture ruins our valuable pets!

In 1900 we started experimenting with orchids in leaf-mold. We used light, flakey oak leaves gathered from the surface of the soil in our own woods, leaves about half decayed, which felt spongy to the touch. We used a little fine sand with them and in some cases we also added a proportion of chopped sphagnum. We did not use the fine, powdery material sold here for imported Belgian leaf soil, for we believed then, and still are of the opinion, that our own leaf compost is fully as good as the high-as careful attention as it is possible to give them on a private estate, watering being always done very carefully.

A batch of some 500 odontoglossums were tried in leaf-mold and for a time they appeared to thrive, but with the advent of torrid weather they went to pieces rapidly and suffered much more from the heated spell than plants in fern fibre. The flowers produced on leaf-mold plants lacked substance; they also failed to keep as well either on the plants or cut as those grown in fern root. We watched them particularly to discover this. Probably our poorest success was with miltonias. A good batch of M. vexillaria in its various forms were tried in leaves. The year before being potted this particular lot gave us about 150 spikes. Six or eight months' culture in leaves reduced the spikes the succeeding year to sixty and we verily believe that had we left the plants in the compost another year we would have lost them. The miltonia spikes were weak flowers, flabby and totally lacking in substance. Happily, today these plants are in good condition, no thanks, however, to leaf-mold.

It seems to be the general opinion in Europe that cypripediums do not take kindly to leaf-mold. All our plants tried in it did very badly. Celogyne cristata did fairly well in leaf-mold and moss. We think the moss probably was the better of the component parts. We can get far better results, however, from plants in fern fibre. We had nine and ten flowers on spikes of C. cristata last spring in fern fibre, but never had over five or six on leaf-mold plants.

Coming to cattleyas and laelias, we found leaf-mold a veritable humbug. All plants tried in it eventually went "queer." We received a batch of Cattleya Mossiae from Europe four years ago, potted in Belgian leaf soil. The plants had nice, green leaves but not a live root. We gave them six months' trial on the Belgian diet, but it took them nearer the grave weekly.

We have tried other orchids than those named in leaf-mold, including dendrobiums, restrepias, adams, lycastes, masdevallias and phaius. We never discovered any advantage from its use. We have also used a proportion of half-decayed leaves mixed with fern fibre and moss, but did not find it so safe a compost as one of straight osmunda fibre.

We have carefully read for several years past the numerous contributions to your foreign contemporaries, the Orchid Review, Gardeners' Chronicle and The Garden, on this subject. Some excellent growers commend it, others equally as good condemn it. We find very few now advocating culture in pure leaf-mold, but rather mixed with polypodium fibre and moss, and it is admitted on all hands that much greater care in watering is necessary. In America our orchid collections are fewer and smaller than in Europe, but an orchid grower here must care for double or treble the number of plants of the European grower. In Europe the hose is little used, here it is universal. They have cool summers compared to ours and a plant which may only need water once a week there will require it daily here. An overplus of water on the leaf-mold plants is disastrous. The porosity of fern fibre is such that plants in it do not mind an extra soaking in the least.

We have carefully noted quite a number of orchid collections of late. The best plants were in nearly every case grown in osmunda fibre. Particularly is this true of odontoglossums. Occasional plants may be seen in good condition in and more to their profit to present their publications in the form of literature of a permanent, informational value, rather than as mere lists of varieties, priced. Such a book of carefully selected facts is The Pecan, published by the G. M. Bacon Co., DeWitt, Ga. The pecan industry is becoming an important one in priced foreign article. For some months we detected signs of betterment on some species of orchids, and even two years ago we were not prepared to pass a definite opinion on the final outcome, but we have no hesitation in doing so now. We may say right here that our plants are not grown commercially, but they receive leaf-mold. How long will they last in such material? Is it worth while spending extra time on such plants if they can be grown as well in fern fibre? We are watching with interest one or two collections where leaf soil is being used and we find most of the roots are in the surfacing of moss, very few in the mold.

We are aware that leaves contain a small proportion of available nitrogen and that they are to a considerable extent "nature's own food." We may be, furthermore, told that fern fibre is lacking in plant food. We are of the opinion, however, that orchids require something more than half-decayed leaves and clear water to sustain them and this something lacking should be given in the form of liquid manure or other stimulants. As, however, this opens up quite another field we will leave a discussion of it for some future occasion.

HYDRANGEA HORTENSIS ROSEA

At many of the spring shows and club meetings at Easter time Julius Roehrs, of Rutherford, N. J., exhibited a new hydrangea of very pleasing pink color and which he considers the finest flowering novelty of recent years. It has certainly made a very favorable impression wherever seen and Mr. Roehrs has worked up a large stock for distribution to the trade this season.

VIOLETS.

About the Specialist.

For several years we have written, at irregular intervals, a little about the care, etc., of violets and in one way and another and by direct invitation tried to get other growers to discuss methods of culture, etc., but have not been successful in calling them out. But just see how easily "Ye Editor" does it, by simply heading our article April 28 with one little line of four words, "Decline of the Specialist."

It did kind of take my breath away when I saw that, for as a rule, I, myself, thoroughly believe in a person making a specialty of one or two things, and did not think, and do not, that what I wrote applied to specialists. As a whole I am astonished that a specialist should take the time to peruse my notes, for, as I have before stated, I do not presume to give them any pointers, but have hoped that I might help those who had not devoted much time to violets.

Brother Sim takes issue with my statement that there is not the good money in violets that there formerly was. Will he kindly look up his back numbers and see what the reports were last winter at holiday times? Then go back a number of years and again make comparison.

He says "that there is as much money in growing violets as there ever was." Well, I am glad if he finds it so, but we have been growing them for about twenty years and do not find it that way, quality, etc., all being equal.

He also says that he "believes that the one who thoroughly understands violet growing can have the same or better success each year." I think he is the first grower that I ever heard make such an assertion. If he can do so, the outlook is certainly poor for some of the rest of we poor growers. He also thinks chance played a great part in the success of the "plungers." I agree with him, but I also think that, as a rule, chance is more kind to violet plungers in their first year or so, than to other plungers, providing, of course, that they have a reasonable knowledge of growing plants.

One more statement; he says that "the modern violet house, when properly handled, should control the atmospheric condition." This I will also admit partially, but not entirely, as you cannot make clear, bright, growing days of dark, damp days, chilly and raw, which are not conducive to growing good flowers, with the best of houses, and if the soil and atmosphere do not have something to do with good violets why is it that the violets from the Hudson river valley have a reputation that none others attain?

Preparing the Soil.

After having gotten your border ready for the soil, the question of the soil itself comes next and, assuming that you had not planned to grow a house of violets until a short time since, of course you did not prepare soil for filling same. In this case we would advise your using a part of the soil that you prepared for your carnations, this probably coming the nearest to what you want, unless your soil is very sandy, when your rose pile might come nearer the mark, for violets like a moderately heavy loam, with plenty of good sod fibre in it.

You can work over your soil two or three times yet before spreading it in the border in the house, and if you had not already mixed your fertilizer with it, so much the better. Well rotted cow manure we think is best or all. However, if you cannot procure this, thoroughly rotted horse manure, free from straw and litter, will answer fairly well. We would consider it wisdom to let commercial fertilizers alone, unless you are an expert in their use, and even then we would much rather have the cow manure.

Do I hear you inquire about bone? Well, I like it very much in many places, but would advise trying it in very limited quantities on violets, and I really have my doubts about its being good for them as a whole. In working over the soil use about one-fifth of the manure, spreading it out in thin layers, in the ordinary way of making up soil piles, also add a little fresh air slaked lime.

Above all, when handling soil at all times be careful not to work when too wet, as it is ruinous to do so, and yet you will see men doing it who ought to know better, and who, if spoken to about it, try to apologize by saying that it was late and that they had to do it, or some similar excuse. Don't do it; wait a few days. If after working over the first time it looks as if you were going to have bad weather that would delay you too long before you would have an opportunity to work it again, cover the pile with canvas, old boards or something, so that you may work it as soon as ready, which should be in about a week as a rule.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The advent of warmer weather, with its consequent heavy production of flowers, has caused a heavy slump in prices all around. Roses are coming of poor quality. Carnations continue extra fine, ordinary grades selling as low as 50 cents per 100. Violets are now practically over. They have lasted remarkably this season. Antirrhinum and stocks are plentiful. Spanish iris sells well and a few lots of dahlias are seen. Lily of the valley is druggy. Outdoor supplies will be in flower within a few days. Yellow trumpet daffodils and Narcissus poeticus are very abundant from open ground.

The May Exhibition.

The regular May exhibition of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society on May 7 while not a large one contained some very meritorious exhibits. The display of herbaceous calceolarias was a remarkable one. James Stuart gardener to Geo. F. Fabyan won for six plants with perfect specimens three feet in diameter, flowers large and foliage almost hiding the pots. W. A. Riggs, gardener to E. A. Clark, was second with equally as large plants, which, however, were a trifle past their prime. Probably nowhere else in America are such superb calceolarias shown as in Boston.

For six show or fancy pelargoniums Mr. Stuart was again in the lead, with large, well flowered plants of Mabel, Lady Duff, H. M. Stanley, Admiration, May Queen and Mrs. Ashley. The same exhibitor received honorable mention for Miss Middleton, a new pink variety. Walter Hunnewell, T. D. Hatfield, gardener, received a cultural certificate for three large and splendidly berried specimens of Aucuba Japonica foemina. Plants berried as these were would sell on sight for Christmas decorations. James E. Rothwell, Emil Johansson, gardener, showed two well flowered plants of a seedling orchid, Lælia Latona (L. Cinna-barina x L. purpurata). The plants were procured by Mr. Rothwell three years ago. They were awarded a certificate of merit. This orchid was first raised by Messrs. Veitch & Son, of London, and is still rather scarce in American collections.

For forty-eight named tulips, Mr. Sullivan, gardener to W. Whitman, was first. J. B. Shurtleff and Mrs. E. M. Gill secured the pansy prizes. L. E. Small was awarded a certificate of merit for his new white carnation, No. 3. This secured honorable mention at the spring show. That Mr. Small has a winner in this carnation, is the verdict of all who have seen it growing. Harvard Botanic Gardens, Robert Cameron, gardener, had an extensive display of named narcissi, tulips, fritillarias, trilliums, saxifragas, aubretias, dielytras, dodecatheons and other seasonable hardy flowers which were much admired. These were awarded a gratuity. There were a number of collections of native plants and a fine display of vegetables.

Horticultural Society Meets.

Considerable business was transacted at the regular monthly meeting of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society on May 7. Several new members were elected. An invitation was extended to the American Peony Society to meet in conjunction with the M. H. S. at the annual exhibition on June 11. Henry Clapp, for fourteen years chairman of the committee of school gardens, resigned and a letter of thanks was voted to be sent to him for his long, faithful service. An appropriation not to exceed $700 was voted to the committee on exhibitions with which to procure new glassware. The sum of $200 was voted to be used in special prizes for the coming chrysanthemum show, when the C. S. A. meets in Boston. The prizes will probably be awarded for fifty blooms of any variety shown in the large china vases of the society. The prizes to be $60, $50, $40, $30, and $20. It was announced that John C. Chappin, of Newton, had left the society $1,000, the interest from the same, to be offered in prizes for roses. The committee on prizes and exhibitions were empowered to issue a schedule for the next spring show, when the American Rose Society meets in Boston, at an early date. Some additional attractive classes will be added.

Various Notes.

Doyle made a window decoration of the single dahlia, Twentieth Century, the past week. Quite a number of growers, both private and commercial, are trying dahlias in benches.

Ripe strawberries in pots are being used by several florists for window decorations. The plants are not well grown and the fruit rather small, but they attract the notice of passersby more than seasonable flowers.

Shade temperatures running as high as 82 degrees during the past week have caused vegetation to advance by leaps and bounds. Planting of deciduous trees and shrubs has been hurried to a close and evergreens are now being taken in hand.

The grounds at the Harvard Botanic Gardens are very interesting at present. Spring bulbous plants make a fine show. Some of the better known narcissi, such as Emperor, Horsfieldi, Empress, Sir Watkins, Stella, Cynosure, Leedsii, Duchess of Brabant and rugilobus, and many tulips are at their best. Numerous rock and other herbaceous perennials are in full bloom. Some fine Forsythia suspensa are a mass of bloom although as a rule these are winter killed near Boston. Magnolias are also in fine flower.

At the next meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, on May 17, Carl Blomberg, of North Easton, will read a paper on alpine plants.

The most effective tulips now flowering in the Boston Public Gardens are the following: Scarlet, white and yellow Pottebakker, Queen of the Netherlands, Keizerskroon, Thomas Moore, Proserpine, Prince of Austria, Chrysolora, Joost van Vondel, Cottage Maid, Rose Luisante, Duchesse de Parma, Bride of Haarlem and Vermilion Brilliant.

In your last issue you quote some deprecatory remarks of Varnum Frost on greenhouses, in which he tells us "the greenhouse men will yet come to grief." Mr. Frost is an old member of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society and is a good grower of fruits and vegetables. He seems to consider our experimental stations and college professors in something of the nature of humbugs and is not afraid to so express himself in public. It is only a very few years ago that we heard Mr. Frost denounce the spraying of apple trees as a humbug and state that he did not believe his trees were harmed at all by being threadbare occasionally. Mr. Frost the past two seasons has sprayed his apples and now commends what he formerly condemned. We think his anti-greenhouse views will similarly change. Mr. Frost is a first-class market grower and a successful exhibitor at our Boston shows. W. N. CRAIG.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Business is dull this week. The supply of flowers has increased enormously, with but little demand for them. Beauties and Edgelys are very fine. They sell fairly well, but many of them at ridiculously low prices. Brides and Maids are falling off in quality; only the best sell. There are immense quantities of really fine carnations on the market. Despite their quality they are almost a drug. Good judges believe that we shall see a scarcity of flowers in a few weeks, should the present warm weather continue, Valley and sweet peas are perhaps the strongest varieties on the list, one wholesaler, S. S. Pennock, being obliged to telegraph for two extra shipments of valley on one afternoon recently.

Bedding Plants.

This week has brought us very warm weather and the fateful May 10, a combination which starts the planting season in earnest. Aschmann, Becker, Carpenter, Coles, Meckey, Zimmer and other wholesale growers of bedding plants are busily engaged getting out their plants, which, by the way, does not seem particularly satisfactory to some of the retailers, who complain that their customers can buy at just the same prices that they can. This is certainly a condition of things that should be remedied.

New Bowling Trophy.

Philadelphia is the proud possessor of a beautiful silver cup, offered by F. H. Kramer, of Anacostia, D. C., a grower with 50,000 feet of glass whose product is sold in the Washington market. The cup was offered for competition between the cities of Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia, each team consisting of five men, rolling three games in each of the three cities, the contest to be decided in favor of the club making the largest number of pins in the nine games. Baltimore secured the lead in the first series by about 100 pins, Philadelphia came out ahead in the series played in this city, by the very narrow margin of some ten pins, while in the final series, rolled in Washington last Friday, Philadelphia was again victorious by some 300 pins, thus winning the series and the match in clever style. The winning team on this occasion consisted of D. T. Conner, T. Dunlap, W. R. Gibson, W. Graham and B. Starkey.

Wyndmoor.

It is a general truth that hard workers do not as a rule, look as well as those who do not work hard. The greeting, "Why, you can't be working, you look too well," is one of those sayings with some truth in it, when the dissipated and the loafers are omitted. So when you go to see a rose place, at this season of the year, that you have heard about all winter as producing fine stock in great quantities when stuff was scarce, you naturally expect to see a rather rough looking lot of plants. It is surprising, however, how many fine flowers Myers & Samtman are still cutting from Beauties and Edgelys that have done yeoman service throughout the entire winter. Their plants were very heavy and full of buds.

Some of the houses are being put through a course of treatment that should enable them to withstand our trying climate until thrown out. While American Beauty is the rose grown in this immense place, Queen of Edgely has done exceptionally well, producing some superb flowers that will be long remembered by those who saw them at the show. American Belle, Liberty and Sunrise are also grown in smaller quantity. A part of the fine range built two years ago is now being devoted to young stock, two benches having been torn out and filled with young Beauties and their cousins all in thrifty condition. The place has the reputation of being very prosperous and impresses the visitors as being exceptionally well managed.

The Buyer.

It is a well-known fact that most of the purchasing for our retail flower stores, both large and small, is done on the place by the proprietor himself or a member of the firm. This work is of great importance, as on the tact and judgment of the buyer of cut flowers and plants, much of the store's success depends. This may seem to the uninitiated a simple matter, but it is very complex. Our business is unlike any other; it requires nice discrimination to decide when to firmly hold a steady source of supply by taking stock in dull times and when to decline to purchase at all. Then, too, curiously enough much depends on the way the buying is done, for while it is a purely business matter, a little of the milk of human kindness is often a great help in securing needed stock.

The increase in the number and importance of the commission houses and the advent of the Flower Market, bringing together great quantities of stock, combined with the keen competition among the stores themselves, seems likely to cause a change in the methods of procuring at least a part of the stock. The retailer often cannot leave his business, yet he must know where certain things are to be found, about comparative excellence, price, in short have a line on the market. So he sends a trusty retainer to do this work, and the buyer has appeared among us so quietly that one hardly recognizes him at first, but there he is, examining, selecting, making one wonder whether the race of buyers will wax strong and in time supplant the race of peddlers!

BUFFALO.

Stock Over-abundant.

It only needed twenty-four hours to change from very temperate to very tropical and the past week's heat and sun have made the supply of flowers of all seasonable kinds overabundant. Roses and carnations have been piling up in great quantity and there is no particular price on them. Daffodils and early tulips from outside have also helped towards the abundance.

Planting Work Heavy.

The plantsmen are getting busy and will soon be rushed. Most of our people know that it is not safe to put out tender plants till the last days of the month, but there is lots doing besides that. It seems that our spread-out city and the garden-surrounded houses on all residence streets are the cause of a great demand for labor and material to fix up and embellish the grounds. You can scarcely dignify this work by calling it landscape gardening, yet it's all in that line, and grading, sodding, seeding, planting of ornamental trees and shrubs, roses, herbaceous plants and hardy vines have made many busy. Then there is the familiar call over the telephone, "Can you sell me a load of dirt?"

We have a real resident landscape artist now, De Peyster Townsend, a civil engineer, graduate of Harvard, a cultivated gentleman, who has a decided talent in his chosen profession and his exchequer is of that enviable kind that it does not matter to him whether "school keeps or not."

George McClure has several large jobs on hand, employing thirty-five to forty men. L. H. Neubeck has a gang or two outside. C. W. Zimmerman, Dennis O'Connell, the William Scott Co. and several others are rushed with "jobbing" work, besides a number of a coarser breed of humanity who grade and sod the surroundings of a newly built residence at so much per square yard. The latter belong more to the lightning rod and tree peddler class. They never expect to do work twice for the same person, but the florist does, for in a well-kept garden there is something doing all the time.

Everyone who plants a tree or shrub on his lawn or a clematis, Crimson Rambler or begonia on his veranda, is a benefactor of his city. It makes it a more beautiful city to live in and by his efforts at embellishments compels his neighbor to do the same.

Various Notes.

There has been a good crop of spring store openings and a few of entirely new establishments. Many readers of the REVIEW who have attended conventions in this city will remember the old Tift house, good, bad and indifferent at various times under different managements. Now on the site stands a most up-to-date department store. So modern is it in appointments that you have to seek the eastern and western metropolis to find such magnificence and luxury. Their opening yesterday and reception to the public in the evening was an event. Palms and ferns were judiciously placed wherever they could adorn and vases of American Beauties were in profusion at every nook and corner. W. J. Palmer & Son were the floral artists.

At the opening of a wonderful new drug store last week, one of a syndicate of stores which are represented in all large cities, they advertised "Music by Kuhn's orchestra," "Floral decorations by Anderson." So they need us for all functions.

The national convention of the Y. M. C. A. convenes here this week and the city and society will be graced by the presence of that good girl, Helen Gould, and more posies will be used on many occasions.

We picked up a little story recently which will do for Adam Graham's parlor friends. I don't know that it points a moral, yet it's a lesson to make every effort happy. A Scotch clergyman was taking a stroll in a neighboring parish and he came across Sandy McTavish sleeping by the roadside: "What ails ye the morn, Sandy?" Answer—"I would na be positive whether it wa' a funeral or a wedden, but whatever it wa' it wa' a most extraordinary success."

The annual election of officers of the B. F. C. is to be followed by a banquet tonight and let us hope it will be "a most extraordinary success," with different results. W. S.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Since the middle of last week the market has been in a most deplorable state of oversupply. It has been a week of glut fully equal to anything in previous experiences. As is usual in such a time, the out of town demand has shrunk materially and, after the legitimate requirements are supplied, there is an unwieldy mass of material left in the wholesalers' hands. It then becomes a case of getting all that one can from the men who run the cheap sales. It is surely the harvest time for the Greeks and the quantities of material they carry away each day are really something surprising. In the aggregate the sales of the wholesale houses are up to ordinary records at this season, but the average returns to the growers are too small to be a pleasant subject for contemplation. Red roses clean up after a fashion but Brides and Maids are hard to move at any price if not strictly first-class.

The warm weather of last week was rapidly taking the quality out of the stock. Roses were becoming soft and carnations rapidly losing color, but the change to cool, bright weather with a dry atmosphere is doing much to restore qualities to the high level they have maintained all season. There are plenty of the first-grade roses for everyone and few poor carnations are seen, the general average being very good. It is thought that the rose crop is showing a slight recession already because of replanting operations and it is hoped that a few days more will see the worst of the glut past, but there is every prospect of the carnation receipts continuing heavy for some time to come.

There are unlimited quantities of southern stock available, such as lilacs, narcissi and arbutus and now peonies, cape jasmine and outdoor tulips are beginning to arrive and neither finds a very hearty reception. As one of the wholesalers expresses it, there is probably little difference in the market, compared with the same dates last year, in so far as roses and carnations are concerned, and carnations may be doing even a little better than usual in May, but it is the spring stuff which is suffering. Sweet peas find a fairly responsive market, but there are many more than the usual requirements. Gladioli are seen. Pansies are coming in heavily and sell at all sorts of prices, some as low as 20 cents per 100, some as high as $1 per 100. Violets are done for. Callas were seldom in so great oversupply. Longiflorums are not so plentiful as formerly, but still in excess of the demand.

Various Notes.

The Flower Growers' Company has elected Percy Jones as financial secretary and manager in the place of John Sinner, who has resigned after a year and a half of service. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Sinner by the board of directors in appreciation of his efficient service. He is still a member of the board.

J. A. Budlong has a quantity of Beauty plants in pots which are expected to be in full bloom for Decoration day sales.

George Munro, son of John Munro, of Rogers Park, and Miss Lizzie Hermes were married on Tuesday and had the assistance of many of the craft of the neighborhood in the celebration of the event.

Mrs. A. M. Schafer is cutting some very fine roses.

C. W. McKellar is getting in a very diversified stock, including cape jasmine, Bridal Wreath spiraea, arbutus, very fine pansies, sweet peas and orchids. He is on a floor practically given over to roses and carnations and finds business very satisfactory.

Frank Keu is rebuilding four of his oldest houses, using Garland's iron gutter. This will give him a range practically new and in fine shape.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is still getting in immense quantities of southern narcissi.

Ed. Eagle has been having a bad time with the rheumatism all winter and finds that it handicaps him badly in handling the heavy spring trade.

All the retailers who do outdoor planting report very busy times and it looks as though rather more of this kind of work is being done than usual.

Bassett & Washburn are cutting very fine Carnot roses. Their crop of Liberty is rather light just now as they are drying off some of the plants preparatory to their getting a midsummer crop.

John Poehlmann takes an optimistic view of the situation. He says the glut is bad but he has seen it worse and it will soon be better.

The A. L. Randall Co., which has been headquarters for white lilac all season, is not getting in quantities of outdoor white lilac, but they do not find it strongly in demand.

At E. H. Hunt's they report shipping trade still keeping up fairly well, but most of the orders are small.

George Reinberg reports the business in carnation cuttings keeping up unusually well, perhaps because some are already sold out. He has propagated immense quantities this year.

The Benthay-Coatsworth Co. says they are cleaning up in fair shape each day except on Brides and Maids, which are hard to move.

Visitors: E. G. Hill, Richmond, Ind.; Louis Noe and Mrs. Noe, Madison, N. J.; T. E. Cashman, Owatonna, Minn.; C. Spickerman, Sandwich, Ill.; James Chacona, Milwaukee.

The Florists' Club will hold the first of the Thursday night meetings this evening. Secretary Wienhoeber has sent out the following call: The regular meeting nights of the Chicago Florists' Club will hereafter be on the second and fourth Thursdays of the month. By correspondence vote the meetings will be called to order promptly at 8 o'clock p. m., in our new and larger rooms in Handel Hall, 40 Randolph street. Come in and help make the opening of the new rooms a success.

It is possible that the fact that good lettuce is not now bringing more than 20 cents a case may serve to quiet some of the carnation growers north of town who felt uneasy when their neighbors, for a month or two only, got 40 to 50 cents a case for their crop.

Bassett & Washburn are getting in large quantities of new ferns from the south and Mr. Washburn says they are of such quality that he thinks the dealers there could compete with Massachusetts in ferns if they went at it properly. Ferns are bringing all the way from $2 to $4.50 in this market. Bassett & Washburn are also handling large quantities of cape jasmine, but find them slow sale at $1 per 100.

The George Wittbold Co. reports that this promises to be the busiest month in the history of the concern, including all departments. As one item they have sold, in small lots, 500 loads of soil at $4 a load.

The "get away" in the bowling tournament is positively announced for next Tuesday night, at alleys selected by the committee.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market on Monday was about as depressed as at any time this year. Summer heat prevailed, the shipments were enormous and the ice boxes were full to overflowing. The last of the violets could not be given away. Over 50,000 of the remnants went into seclusion in the refuse barrels on Saturday. Where large quantities of roses are purchased the buyer is the autocrat and what he offers generally goes. The retail demand is very light. Lilacs from the south are very good. Carnations have fallen, even for fancies, to the low prices of the poorer grades of a few weeks ago. These are certainly melancholy days for the cut flower trade. But the over-supply must diminish and before the week is over there is a general hope of improvement. Meantime comparison with the records of other seasons seems to lead the reasonable ones to look upon present conditions philosophically.

Club Meeting.

The monthly meeting of the New York Florists' Club was well attended and the exhibit of bedding and other plants most varied and creditable. The exhibitors were: John Birnie, of Hoboken, N. J., assorted verbenas, two boxes Alfred Henderson geraniums, box pelargoniums; H. C. Steinhoff, West Hoboken, spiraeas, Crimson Ramblers, a grand specimen of Magna Charta and a finely trained larch in the form of the missing link; Daly Bros., Granton, geraniums Grant and Paunpeck; Herman Mende, Secaucus, assorted geraniums; Leach Bros., Jersey City, anthericum, geraniums and heliotrope; John Lappe, of Long Island, candytuft and Phlox subulata rosea; John Pearson, Jersey City, Dracena indivisa; A. C. Schroeter, Bayonne, pansies and lemon verbenas; George Darsley, Jersey City, heliotrope; Geo. Fick, West Hoboken, daisies; Hartman & Wagenfor, Winfield Junction, cowslips; John T. Schupp & Co., West Hoboken, Fuchsia Little Beauty; B. Paseler, echeveria; Lehnig & Winnefeld, Celosia Thompsoni, new, and fifteen varieties of new pelargoniums; Charles Hunt, Staten Island, pansies and fine assorted geraniums. The whole formed one of the most interesting, varied and meritorious exhibitions ever made in the club room and evoked much enthusiasm and appreciation.

The committee of awards reported that, there being no competition, no certificates were awarded, but that everything shown was worthy of general commendation. Mr. O'Mara, the chairman of the committee, in commenting on the exhibit so typical of the spring season, expressed the gratification of the committee and became reminiscent and eloquent in recalling happy memories of past experiences in the growing of this class of stock in the old days and hoped for many repetitions of the growers' enterprise in future opportunities. Votes of thanks were given the exhibitors and a special vote was tendered John Birnie for his earnest efforts in making the exhibit a success.

Mr. Birnie in responding said the display was an epitome of the plant market, where $5,000 changes hands every morning, and announced that the agitation going on for the market building would eventually bring about the erection of a handsome building for the plant growers. He felt it was the duty of the New York Club and the horticultural press to assist the project in every way possible and predicted that the time would come when all plants would be sent to and sold by commission men, even if a new race of these valuable agents must be created. Mr. Wallace gave some interesting information as to Covent Garden and its methods of selling, spoke of the encouraging efforts of the New York city press in behalf of the projected market building and suggested a resolution endorsing the work already done by the plant growers looking to the securing of a permanent market, which was unanimously adopted. Mr. Eberman spoke of a prospective exhibition of plants and flowers in October by the Siegel-Cooper Co., at which premiums were to be given and sought the endorsement of the scheme by the club, which will consider the proposition at a subsequent meeting.

The outing committee reported rapid progress, many tickets sold, the program progressing encouragingly and every indication of a banner attendance. The transportation committee announced a fifteen-day-ticket rate of $23.25 to the St. Louis convention and return, with no certificate plan. The decision as to the route was left to the committee.

Mr. Bunyard appeared on crutches, though greatly improved in health, and hopes to be himself again in time for the bicycle race at the outing in June. Alex. Burns, Jr., was elected a member of the club. The June meeting of the club will be peony night, with accompaniment of strawberries and cream and the ladies. A large attendance is assured.

William Elliott delivered his address on the "Idiosyncrasies of the Auction Business," interspersing it with many historical facts, humorous anecdotes and prophetic hints as to consignments of goods for auction disposal from the Netherlands, Japan and Porto Rico. A vote of thanks was accorded him for the effort.

Various Notes.

Next Monday evening will be farewell night at the Tenth avenue alleys and after next Monday the club will meet at modern alleys near Twenty-third street and Sixth avenue, a much more convenient location. The St. Louis representation will probably be decided at next Monday evening's contest.

C. H. Joosten reports a very prosperous season, every rose sold of his big importation and could have sold 50,000 more. Mr. and Mrs. Joosten are going to the nurserymen's convention next June, at Atlanta, and to the S. A. F. meeting in St. Louis, and there will be "others" from New York.

G. C. Eldering, of Overveen, Holland, the six foot four bulb man, is in the city and reports stock in Europe in excellent condition on his departure. He is one of the firm of W. J. Eldering & Sons and one of four brothers of equal physical proportions.

Arbor day last Friday was an impressive occasion. Thousands of children with appropriate ceremonies, planted in the school yards trees that will give shade to coming generations.

The interest in suburban gardening has grown immensely of late and the effect of this is most apparent in the conditions in every seed store in the city. Without an exception this has been a wonderful season. Retail sales are beating all records. Stores are overwhelmed with both mail orders and customers. There seems to be a growth in public sentiment almost abnormal as to country homes and gradually but surely the development of this taste and love for nature is taking into the small towns and villages within easy distance of New York, everybody who can afford the luxury of a country summer home and thousands who yearly make their venture a permanent investment.

Among the visitors last week were P. Welch, of Boston; W. P. Craig, of Philadelphia, and J. M. Gasser, of Cleveland.

The auctions are in full blast now, the splendid weather and fine assortment of stock drawing hosts of suburbanites. Few of the faces are familiar. The public has caught on to opportunities for bargains they never dreamed of and the merry auctioneer rejoices "up his sleeve" in the development of his mission.

Carl Woerner, with Chas. Zeller & Son, Flatbush, has the sympathy of all in the loss of his wife last Wednesday.

His many friends also tender W. J. Stewart, of Boston, their condolences in the death of his grandson on Monday.

Traendly & Schenck, the wholesalers, who for ten years have been located at 38 West Twenty-eighth street, will remove to their new store at No. 44 about the end of the present month. They have leased the whole building and will fit the upper stories for offices, putting in a new front in their own department and making alterations that will give them, including their basement facilities, one of the largest and best stores in their line in the country.

Louis Schmutz, of Flatbush, has yielded to the tide of building necessity on the part of the public and sold $15,000 worth of his property there. From a population of 15,000 a few years ago when I knew it "not wisely" there has been an increase to over 60,000, a straw which shows which way the wind is blowing around New York and an indication of what may be expected as the years increase.

Some very handsome wistarias in pots, from the Hinode Floral Co., beautify the windows of Wm. Ghormley, the wholesale florist.

The old board of directors was re-elected at the annual meeting of the Cut Flower Exchange last week and the new members appointed were J. Donaldson, Thos. C. Duncan, John Snyder, Charles Smith and Herman Maenner.

Mrs. William Siebrecht, of Astoria, leaves next week on the steamer Rotterdam for a European tour, accompanied by her son, W. Siebrecht, Jr., who at the age of 21 has just taken his degree at the New York Law School.

John Dutcher, of Nyack, who has a stand on the second floor of the Coogan building, was married on Monday of this week, and his friends extend congratulations.

John H. Taylor, of Bayside, is devoting 300 acres of his estate to residential sites. It is one of the finest sections for this purpose on Long Island.

The annual exhibition of the Horticultural Society of New York is on at Bronx park today. There is an attractive premium list and close competition in many of the classes. The chief interest centers in the fifty-dollar prize for the best novelty.

Charles F. Meyer, the importer and exporter, has removed his office from 19 Barclay street to more commodious quarters at 99 Warren street.

The managers of the Coogan building, where the Cut Flower Exchange, the Cut Flower Co., and other growers and dealers are located, have decided to devote the entire first floor to the interests of the trade, under the title of the New York Flower Market. They are now remodeling the place, throwing it all into one large room corresponding to the two floors above. This is a step toward concentration that has been talked of for a long time.

HORTICULTURAL AUCTIONS.

[The following is a synopsis of the remarks of W. J. Elliott, before the New York Florists' Club, Monday evening, May 9.]

The discourse which I am to enter upon this evening is styled the "Idiosyncrasies of the Auction Business." No doubt this word will need a definition and owing to my scant knowledge of Latin I am helpless in the matter, but as I see a light in the firmament, maybe Mr. O'Mara will come to my relief. At

NOTE

The Editor is pleased when a Reader presents his ideas on any subject treated in the REVIEW. As experience is the best teacher, so do we learn fastest by an exchange of experiences. Many valuable points are brought out by discussion.

Good penmanship, spelling and grammar, though desirable, are not necessary. Write as you would talk when doing your best.

WE SHALL BE GLAD TO HEAR FROM YOU.

any rate, as near as Hoyle can come to it in his materia medica, the definition is what may agree with one might be distasteful to others.

Which brings to my mind a story of a young medical student passing his final examination on materia medica. After being plied with a number of questions he was finally asked what an expectorant was. He seemed worried for the time and in sheer desperation blurted out, "something which comes before you expect it." I presume he got a good mark; but to get back on my subject:

The auction business started at 9 John street, in the sixties, by offering at its first sale a consignment of butter, a strange commodity along with plants. It certainly had the greasing qualities to a future, for at that time the sales were insignificant in comparison with today. They were easily satisfied with $300 while today it reaches $1,000 to $1,200.

Among the notable sales was the George Such sale of orchids, which took an entire week and amounted to $40,000. Then there was Mrs. Morgan's $200,000 sale in which Vanda Sanderiana was sold for $800. These were the palmy days for orchids.

We used to have great rivalry and it caused a new house to spring up and prosper for a time and was succeeded by Roelker & Son. Others jumped in but did not last long. Cleary & Co. succeeded Roelker. Another came by the name of Gardiner. But all of which have gone to sleep. So you see the pioneer house did not have it all its own way.

The monotony of "going, gone, gone" is occasionally broken by some joker who butts in and makes a commotion to draw the attention of the audience from the auction and then in the most polite manner wants to know if he can have a bid, which is recognized, and he deliberately "bids" you a good morning and takes his departure. Of course, the laugh is on the auctioneer without a doubt.

It has been only of late years that the Netherlands have favored us with such large consignments. They certainly see a future for their goods and their returns are of a satisfactory nature, from acknowledgments. Japan seems to be getting there, as well as Porto Rico.

Thanking you, gentlemen, for your attention, I will close by reciting to you an instance of two shipwrecked salesmen, a story fitting the occasion. Ikey and Sammy Stobosky, who were unfortunately wrecked on the high seas, were the only fortunate ones to have a boat all by themselves, which was not so bad to start with, until after the third day, when Ikey got tired looking for a sail and thereupon the sponge laid down. Sammy took the watch and in the course of time spied a sail and in his ecstasies shouted to Ikey: "Awake, awake, a sail in sight." Ikey, in the throes of death, remarked, "and I haven't got a catalogue."

PORTLAND, ORE.

Portland, Ore., is most favorably situated, having every advantage that a big city requires. Its water facilities are of the best, the Willamette river coursing directly through the city and spanned by four substantial bridges is deep enough to accommodate the largest ocean vessel. At the north flows the mighty Columbia, which connects us with the Pacific ocean. Rising abruptly at the south and west limits of the city, and towering several hundred feet above, are the Portland and Willamette heights, from which is afforded a magnificent view of the surrounding country and the Lewis and Clark fair grounds. These lofty elevations, reached by street car service, are clothed with a thick growth of fir, dogwood and lilac, and at this writing are especially interesting to the visitor. A number of elegant homes are situated here and an immense electric sign bearing the figures 1905 seems to remind the public that there will be something doing in Portland next year. H. J. M.

We are in receipt of a query from a reader who says his greenhouses are "almost polluted with" a little white fly which he is very anxious to be rid of, but he doesn't sign his name, which is necessary for queries to receive attention.

CARNATIONS REGISTERED.

The Cottage Gardens Co., Queens, N. Y., registers:

Robert Craig; color, brilliant scarlet; size, three and one-half to four inches; habit, strong and similar to Lawson; an early and free bloomer; stem, twenty-four inches and long from the start; calyx perfect and color does not fade, keeping and shipping as well as the best.

Ethel Ward, color, clear pink; double, full flower of good size and borne on long, stiff stems; exceptionally fragrant and a good keeper and shipper; habit similar but stronger than Harry Fenn, and a free bloomer.

Alma Ward, color, white; a high, perfectly formed bloom, four inches in diameter, with perfect calyx and strong stem and very fragrant; growth exceptionally vigorous, the flowers having a slight flushing of pink at the base of the petals.

Marie Louise Thompson, color beautiful rose pink; flowers three to four inches in diameter, on three to four-foot stems; calyx perfect, the petals without any fringe, the flower being near the English ideal of a round petaled bloom.

Dr. Seezzel; color, clear white with at times a slight blue tint at the center; edge of petals delicately fringed and dotted with bright soft pink; blooms three to four inches on long, stiff stems; form and calyx perfect.

Davis Bros., Bloomsburg, Pa., register Mary Albert; color, pure white; a large bloom on a long stiff stem; an early and continuous bloomer and does not burst at any time of the year; an extra good keeper. ALBERT M. HERR, Sec'y.

FORCING LILAC.

Will you please give cultural directions for bringing the white lilac into bloom for pot plants for Easter, directions to include propagation? C. W.

Writing about lilac for Easter is a little out of season just now, but this is not a bad time to order your plants of some good, reliable importing house, of which there are plenty. Unless you are a large grower it is better to buy through a large firm who import thousands, than it is to import a small lot yourself. You will find it cheaper and the big firms who import largely get a better article. Dismiss the propagating part of the business, for you can't begin to raise a plant from a cutting and prepare it, well set with flower buds, nearly as cheaply as you can buy the imported plants. The forcing for Easter is most simple. When you receive the plants in November or December, store them in a cold frame protected from severe frost, or a cool cellar, but keep the roots moist. As Easter was very early this year about six weeks in a night temperature of 60 degrees brought them in flower all right. Next year Easter is very late and as the flower buds will be more advanced, four weeks may do, but there is no harm in a cool, shaded house for two weeks. Plenty of water at the roots and a daily spraying till the flowers are open is all there is to it. W. S.

FORT WORTH, TEX.—W. L. McCart says business has been very good this season; much better than was expected. The spring work is about at an end however.

THE MARKETS.

CHICAGO, May 11.—Radishes, 25@45c doz. bunches; lettuce, heads, 50@75c bushel, leaf, 15@25c case; cucumbers, 50@75c doz. There are many southern cucumbers.

BOSTON, May 10.—All kinds of produce is in brisker demand but the warmer weather has heavily increased supplies and prices are on the downward grade. Cucumbers have sold at from $2 to $4 a bushel and quality is very fine. Rhubarb from outdoors is now plentiful and prices are only 1 to 3 cents per pound. Lettuce continues fine, at 30 to 75 cents a dozen. Watercress, 30 to 50 cents a doz. Radishes 20 cents a dozen. Parsley, $1 per bushel. Mushrooms very scarce, at $1 a pound, the best coming from Philadelphia. Tomatoes hold up well, the best bringing 25 to 40 cents a pound.

HOUSE FOR CUCUMBERS.

I wish W. S. Croydon would give his opinion of an ideal house for commercial cucumber growing. Please give dimensions and best arrangement of pipes.

X.

An ideal house for growing commercial cucumbers is one where the greatest possible amount of light can be procured and the proper temperature maintained. The construction of the house depends largely on the system adopted in training. If the plants are to be allowed to spread over the benches, any ordinary width or length of house provided as above would be all right if the benches are about four feet wide, with pipes under same to insure enough bottom heat. Personally I prefer to train to trellises, as I consider that I have the plants better under control and have less trouble keeping them clean. A house in which I have been very successful in the growing of cucumbers, though it may not strike some as an ideal house, is an even-span house running north and south, width twelve feet, height to ridge eight feet and length seventy-four feet, but this could, of course, be extended as desired. The height of the sides is four feet, two feet being glass. The inside space allows of ample passage room and two benches four feet wide. Heat is provided by two coils of six 2½-inch pipes, one coil under each bench, which is sufficient to maintain a temperature of 65 degrees during severe weather.

W. S. CROYDON.

CROOKED CUCUMBERS.

Crooked or imperfectly developed cucumbers are not infrequently produced. It is maintained by some authorities that crooked or ill-formed fruit is the result of imperfect fertilization. In many instances this is no doubt the case, but there are other causes underlying the production of poorly formed fruit. It can be safely stated, however, that good plants are endowed with the capacity to produce good fruit, and, conversely, that it must not be expected that perfect fruit will be produced on weak plants. From our observations we are led to believe that crooked or imperfectly developed cucumbers are in the largest number of cases produced by plants which are not normal. For example, plants affected with nematode galls, or weakened by thrips, etc., will develop poor fruit. Anything, in fact, that affects assimilation or interferes with the normal function of the plant weakens it, and the result is poorly developed cucumbers. Since cucumbers are sorted into what is known as No. 1 and No. 2, which bring a different price, the production of straight fruit is a thing to be desired from a financial point of view.

One grower, however, informs me that he has no seconds, as he practices a method of treatment which will develop inferior into perfect fruit. His method consists in the manipulation of the spines. For example, if the fruit is growing too large at either end, the spines are rubbed away on that portion which shows the greatest development. This, it is maintained, will cause the undeveloped portion to fill out and result in a perfectly formed fruit. In the same manner, if one side is developing faster than the other, the spines of that side should be destroyed, which results in stimulating the undeveloped side. As far as I am aware this theory is original with my informer, and we have never discovered any one else who practiced it. It should therefore be accepted for what it is worth.—GEORGE E. STONE, in Bulletin of Hatch Experiment Station.

PEONIES AT ST. LOUIS.

There will be a special exhibition of peonies in the Horticultural building at the St. Louis World's Fair, May 28 to June 7. Entries must be received by the superintendent, J. H. Hadkinson, not later than May 25. The following is the schedule.

Vase of 25 blooms pure white.
Vase of 25 blooms white, shaded pink.
Vase of 25 blooms light pink.
Vase of 25 blooms dark pink.
Vase of 25 blooms crimson.
General collection of Chinese, not less than five blooms of one variety.
General collection of Chinese single varieties, not less than five blooms of one variety.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Moss in Flower Pots.

I notice in one of your recent issues an article dealing with moss on flower pots, and I would like to offer one or two suggestions in regard to the same.

I take it that the moss here represented include algae, which very frequently grow on the exterior of pots and on the soil. The algae most common on pots are cladophora, ulathrix, vaucheria, also various types of blue green algae such as oscillaria and anabaena, etc. Blue green algae can usually be distinguished by the dark, blue-green cast which they give to the pot, although the yellowish-green and blue-green forms are frequently intermixed, giving a combination of color between the yellow-green and blue-green. Most of the true mosses present a similar appearance to the yellow-green algae in their younger stage, although with the aid of a good hand lens they can usually be distinguished from one another.

Certain fertilizers, especially those frequently recommended for forcing flowers, are noted as inducing the growth of algae on the soil and pot. These fertilizers are usually quick-acting ones, especially predominating in ammonia compounds. A small quantity of lime added to the soil prevents to a large extent the growth of algae. In cases where lime does not act injuriously to plants it would be an excellent idea to use it to prevent the growth of algae and moss on flower pots. G. E. S.

How to Retain Help.

Noticing an article in the issue of May 5 headed "The Problem of Help," I wish to say that if the Californians would have better accommodations for their employes, such as sleeping quarters, and not put them in an old barn to sleep, not even furnishing a blanket, also give them better food and not beans three times a day for 365 days of each year, I think the labor problem would be solved. I am one of the many who have been there and taken a liking to the country, but not to the accommodations. So the Californians cannot blame the easterner for being of a roving disposition while there.

PACIFIC COAST.

THE SEASON'S TRADE.

The nursery business begins in California about the first of September and ends about the first of May. By this I mean that during this period all our selling is done. But the greater bulk of the handling of stock is done during the rainy season which, in this portion of California, begins generally about the middle of November and lasts until the end of February or middle of March. In September and October the roses are shifted from the field into the greenhouses, and likewise the carnation plants, although generally a little sooner. All the rose growers had a big business, the largest in the history of the state for more houses are being put up each year and the demand has been great for hardy outdoor stock. Many flower growers have already placed orders with the big nurseries for their roses for next fall's planting and the demand, I think, will be larger than ever. With carnations many of the growers propagate entirely from their own plants and do not have as many places to buy outdoor stock as the growers do in the east, but many of our home places root a great many more cuttings than they can use themselves and other dealers get the benefit. I do not think from present indications that there will be as much building of carnation houses done this coming summer as formerly; most of the houses that are to be erected are for roses.

Now that I have disposed of the months in which these two staples are handled principally, I will mention the state of trade for other articles that the ordinary nurseryman handles. To begin with, our season should have opened about the middle of November, but it was a dry month and business was slow starting. Down in southern California rain was very scarce and planting was considerably retarded. December was a cold, frosty month, with a scant supply of water and it was January before we knew it. Dealers who make a specialty of fruit trees found very poor demand for anything outside of apples, prunes and cherries. Apricots and peaches went begging and plums and pears were a close second. There was a good demand for wine grapes, fair demand for citrus fruits and none at all for olives. Verily, the fruit tree business is a "corker" in California. One Fresno county nurseryman burned up 100,000 fruit trees last week because they did not happen to be the varieties called for this season, although they were the only kinds that could be sold last year and the year before.

And now let me pass on to ornamental stock in general. Our season begins with this class of goods generally about the middle of January. In the months of February and March we had in central and northern California only nine days in which rain did not fall. The Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys were entirely submerged and fully three-fourths of this state received such a drenching that we will for years to come refer to the winter of 1904 as that "wet winter." The result on business can hardly be appreciated unless one was in the midst of it all, as was the writer. It is now the middle of April, our season is almost over and still the ground in many places is too wet to plant. With fruit trees in blossom a month ago, deciduous trees full of leaves and everything else far advanced, our planters will postpone improvements until next fall. With small flowering plants and shrubs that are handled here late in the spring there has been a good demand and the balance of this month and the most of next will find the smaller dealers busy with this class of stock. The larger nurseries do not cater to this trade. G.

The Market.

Beautiful spring is here at last and we are having ideal California weather. Business has been very good for the past two weeks and everything offered has been handled at a good margin. The price of roses keeps up remarkably well. Good Brides and Maids are bringing $1 per dozen wholesale, which price I consider excellent for this season of the year. Shorter and weaker-stemmed roses can be had at low prices but there is a big demand for fancy stock. Beauties are selling wholesale today at $2.50 per dozen for the best and $1 to $1.50 for the poorer flowers. Liberty and Testout are bringing 50 cents to $1 per dozen, with a splendid demand for all the good blooms. Cecil Brunner is grown extensively by some wholesalers and they claim it is one of the best paying crops that can be planted. The flowers sell at $2 per hundred and, considering what a prolific proposition this rose is, it must be a money-maker in any place where it thrives. Although many of the growers are having a siege of "off crop" at present in the carnation line there has been a great quantity of flowers brought to market during the past few days and the quantity is increasing daily. I saw some extra fine Prosperity today from P. C. Meyer, of Burlingame, that are bringing 50 cents per dozen to the grower, also some Estelle as fine as it is possible to grow them, from A. Galloway of Fruitvale, selling at the same price. With smaller sorts we have an abundance at about $2 per hundred. L. longiflorum is more plentiful than at the last writing and selling at $2 per dozen for the best. Valley is scarcer. A few Darwin tulips are shown. Violets are out of season, also narcissi. Bride gladioli are beginning to come and sweet peas are more plentiful although we are paying $1.50 per dozen bunches today.

DISEASED PLANTS.

Enclosed find sample each of a palm, geranium and hydrangea. They all seem to be affected with the same disease. Can you tell me what is the trouble with them? I did not think much of it until the palm started going the same way.

J. H. J.

Besides the above communication I have received a few leaves of diseased zonale geraniums from Dexter, Maine. We think we have been troubled in years past with the geraniums losing their foliage as the samples enclosed and, as I said a few weeks ago, we considered it caused by unfavorable conditions and when those conditions were remedied the disease disappeared. A damp, close and cool atmosphere, with little ventilation and too much water, has been the cause of the trouble with us and when the bright days of spring came, with more fresh air and active root growth, it disappeared.

There is a most marked resemblance between the dead tissue of the leaf of the palm (I think a kentia) and the hydrangea, but if this is a disease that is destroying the tissue of the leaf, is it possible that it is the same thing that is attacking such widely different plants as a palm and hydrangea? I regret that I am not a microscopist or don't have one at hand and therefore could only guess what has killed the tissue of the leaves. At first sight I would have said it was a bad case of sunburn, letting the plants get killing dry and the sun pour down on them through poor glass. But surely J. H. J. would know if he had been guilty of that neglect. Here is a case where the horticultural section of the Agricultural Department at Washington will be a great help to us florists when it gets fully started. Once more, I regret that I cannot enlighten J. H. J., for except a burn or a sadly neglected house plant I have never seen anything like it on either a palm or hydrangea. Your state agricultural college should be able to determine whether it is a specific disease and if it's the same on both plants. W. S.

The regular monthly meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held April 26, President Ballantyne in the chair. Calceolarias were seen at this meeting, for which D. MacFarland, gardener for Mrs. H. Walter Webb, Scarborough, N. Y., was awarded President Ballantyne's prize of a fountain pen. It was decided to hold the annual June exhibition in the Lyceum, Tarrytown, June 10, open from 3 p. m. to 10 p. m., Frances Pammer, Tarrytown, being elected manager. The society offers a second prize of $10 for best twelve Dr. Enguehard chrysanthemum blooms, for which the F. R. Pierson Co. has already offered a silver cup for first prize at the November exhibition. The last Tuesday in May being ladies' night, the society hopes for a good attendance of members and expects to have a very pleasant evening's entertainment, at which refreshments will be served. The Market.

The long-expected good weather has at last materialized and has helped the plantsmen greatly, in getting rid of a great amount of bedding stock and they are over head in work of all kinds in their line.

Of the cut flower trade we will say it is dull and that is putting it mildly, as trade is getting lighter each day and all the symptoms of summer are here. All the cut flowers are showing the effects of the warm weather and some really first-class stock went begging on Saturday for want of demand; $4 is now about the best price for roses, although some extra fancy bring $6 per 100. Fancy long Beauties are becoming very plentiful, and $2 per dozen is all they brought on Saturday. Some of Fred Ammann's stock is really fine. Liberty and Meteors are still good, also some extra fine Kaisers. A good deal of the stock is coming in full bloom. There are plenty of roses in all grades for the demand and at prices to suit the buyer.

In carnations the market is glutted with fine stock, hard to sell at any price. Fancies only brought $2 the latter part of the week, firsts $1.50 and commons $1 in 100 lots. Prices in 1,000 lots went from $6 to $10 and the fakirs got the surplus for about nothing. In bulb stock the market is almost cut out. Romans, Paper Whites, tulips and Dutch hyacinths are out. Callas and Harrisii are still good in supply at $6 and $8 per 100. Outdoor valley is now in at $1.50 per 100. Sweet peas are very plentiful, with the best at 75 cents. The warm weather is rushing in all outdoor stuff, such as lilacs, cape jasmine buds, pansies and irises. Plenty of good, long smilax is in the market, also dagger and fancy ferns. Adiantum and Asparagus Sprengeri have good call.

Quite a lot of entertaining is going on in the different state buildings at the World's Fair. Some of these buildings are handsomely decorated with plants. Beauties are extensively used at these affairs. The German building was made very attractive the past week by one of our west end florists. Some of our leading florists say that they expect work of this kind throughout the summer, which should help greatly during our usual dull summer months.

Various Notes.

J. W. Davis, of New Orleans, was a caller the past week. Robert Zirgenfelder, representing the Piqua Florist Folding Box Co., of Springfield, Ohio, called on the trade last week.

Twenty-five years ago last Thursday Henry Shaw, founder of the Shaw Botanic Garden and Tower Grove park, celebrated his sixtieth anniversary as a citizen of St. Louis, having come here in 1819. Hundreds of prominent citizens called at the Shaw mansion, at Seventh and Locust streets, and congratulated the philanthropist.

The attendance at the World's Fair continues good and the palace of horticulture is receiving more than its share of attention. The apple exhibit of Arkansas is tempting, with its famous Arkansas Black included in the 135 varieties shown. Arizona's grape display is also interesting.

J. W. Dunford, out in Clayton, is growing a lot of new varieties of sweet peas for Burpee, of Philadelphia, for their World's Fair exhibition, which takes place July 23 to August 2 in the Horticulture building.

Superintendent Hadkinson reports a number of entries already in for the tender rose exhibition which takes place May 21 to 25. Entries close May 18 and a big display is looked for. Supt. Hadkinson is surely a hustler, having nearly everything in apple pie order this early. Both he and Chief Taylor are all smiles.

exhibit will be August 6 to 17, just in time for the S. A. F. members to view it. There are fifteen classes to be shown and Mr. Cowee has entered for all. The entries close August 3.

The banquet of the directors of Shaw's Garden will be held some time this month, at the Mercantile Club. The Shaw memorial services also take place this month at Christ Church, when the church is decorated with plants from the Garden.

George E. Kessler, landscape architect at the World's Fair, reports that the placing of 5,000,000 blooming plants in the cascades will finish the rainbow gardens. The effect will be produced through the use of geraniums and verbenas of many colors. The landscape department relies a great deal on geraniums for color and some 150,000 or more plants will be required to finish up their work. The surface soil is being placed now to receive the 13,000 plants required for the dial of the floral clock at the north entrance of the Agriculture building. The 5,000-pound bell that strikes the hours and half hours is now in place in a pavilion at the upper edge of the dial.

Bowling.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 23d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

It is reported that a Philadelphia house paid $12.50 for a bushel of yellow onion sets the past week.

A REPORT from Green Bay, Wis., says that the Wm. Larsen Canning Co. will probably plant between 2,800 and 3,000 acres of peas. A large part of this acreage is in.

SWEET corn is bringing $6 to $8 per bushel and pickling cucumbers $1.35 to $1.50 per pound. Dependable stock in both cases is scarce and easily worth the higher figure.

VISITED CHICAGO—C. L. Roadhouse, representing J. M. Kimberlin & Co., Santa Clara, Cal.; Harry Clair, representing the Planet, Jr., goods, Philadelphia; Henry Field, Shenandoah, Ia.

SEEDING for onion sets is about completed at all of the growing points. The finish will be later than usual this year, but in most cases early enough to insure a good harvest, provided the season is favorable from now on.

A CHICAGO seedsman received a package of seeds from his congressman a day or two ago. It contained sweet peas, nasturtiums, mignonette, petunia, and sweet alyssum. These being "new and rare varieties," the seedsman bought a window box in order to give them a fair trial.

CORN TO PLANT.

On the question as to whether tips and butts of field corn should be discarded when shelling for seeding purposes, W. W. Tracy, Sr., Washington, D. C., writes:

"We are well convinced from our own experience that there is practically no choice in plants produced by the butt, middle and tip grains, and we think all the careful experiments made at the stations confirm this, but cannot call to mind any printed matter concerning it. There is an advantage in rejecting the tip and butt grains of field corn, because thereby we get a more uniform sized grain, which runs through the planter more evenly, and this secures a more even stand, but the advantage is, in my opinion, wholly on account of size of grain and while it holds in the case of any individual ear, we think it is small compared with having a stock where the ears are uniform in size of grain, etc."

J. A. Jeffery, of the Michigan Agricultural College, writes:

"There is still a great deal of discussion among farmers, and especially among corn breeders, as to whether tips and butts should be planted. To my mind the chief reason for shelling out the tips and butts is that more uniform kernels may be had for planting with the horse planter. I think it is true that the larger the kernel the more the young plant may profit from the supply of food stored up in the seed. On the other hand it is equally true, as shown by experiments conducted by our students, that the nearer the kernel lies to the tip of the ear the more quickly it germinates and the more energetic the early growth, and I am inclined to believe that this energy in early growth compensates fully for the lack of food which it obtains from the seed. We found the butt kernels to give the slowest germination. From the standpoint of yield we should not hesitate to plant either butt or tip kernels and it seems to us that there may be a natural law demanding that kernels from all parts of the ear should be planted. I regret that we have no data from our experiment station work upon the subject. D. J. Crosby, now of the office of experiment stations at Washington, found, in a line of investigation carried on here in connection with his thesis work, that the size of kernel from the same part of the ear made a weighable difference in the crops produced from these kernels. The difference in the size of the seed in the case of corn did not appear in this case to make so great a difference in the yield as did the difference in the size of seed in the case of oats, peas and beans."

DRYING SEEDS.

The following is from the pen of Martin J. Sutton, of Sutton & Sons, Reading, England:

Some five-and-twenty years since I read a report, written early in the nineteenth century, from an Indian government official, calling attention to the fact that he had had seeds raised by his gardener in his English country home for his use in India; that while some of these seeds had proved excellent, others were absolutely worthless. On inquiry he found that in the one case the pods containing the seeds had been hung up in the chimney corner of the kitchen of the English mansion for some time and the seeds placed while warm in bottles and sealed. The seeds that had failed, although dried in a similar way, had not been bottled for a con-considerable time afterwards. This hint was sufficient to start me on a long series of experiments, having for their object the safe elimination of the excess of moisture which all seeds contain as harvested in the English climate, however dry they appear when handled. This moisture has been a cause of very great trouble when English seeds, packed in hermetically sealed boxes, passed through the tropics, where the heat in the ship's hold caused the seeds to sweat and become moldy.

Naturally, I found there was a very great diversity in the amount of such moisture contained in the different varieties of seeds, and that, while some seeds could safely lose an amount of moisture equal to 10 per cent of their weight, others could not part with more than 5 per cent without injury; consequently, the degree of dry heat to which seeds could be safely exposed, and the proper duration of such exposure before packing, varied very much, while some seeds required much more gradual desiccation than others. But before the experiments were completed, knowledge on these details was acquired, with the result that there seems hardly any limit to the period during which the germination of seeds may be conserved if they are properly prepared by drying in a suitable high temperature and hermetically sealed in that temperature.

For many years past seeds thus packed by my firm have been successfully used in all climates.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres., F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

THE Texas nurserymen report having had a fine season for both stock and business.

ONE of the best all around sellers is the ampelopsis. Nearly every customer has a place for it.

ONE of the park boards doing considerable new work has found it hard to get American elm of the larger sizes.

It is said that Koster's form of the Colorado blue spruce is more in demand at present than any other evergreen.

COLORADO SPRINGS COLO.—Wm. Clark, florist, is advertising that his is the only place in the city to buy trees and shrubs.

FOR low hedging and ground cover there are few hardy plants more adaptable than Berberis Thunbergi. It is of rapid growth.

THE Piedmont hotel at Atlanta, Ga., has been selected as headquarters for the convention of the American Association of Nurserymen, June 22 to 24.

THE J. Van Lindley Nursery Co., Pomona, N. C., is doing a steadily increasing business and will double its office space before another season.

PARTIES at Wabash, Ind., are planting a large number of catalpa trees for fence post material and the venture is arousing considerable interest in the neighborhood.

THE retinoparas are hardy but should be somewhat protected from winter winds. Small plants are much in demand for use in cold weather window boxes in the larger cities.

T. H. DOUGLAS, of R. Douglas' Sons, says that all piceas, including the very largely planted Norway spruce, stand pruning well, but that it should be done before July 1 in the northern states.

GYSOPHILA PANICULATA.

This member of the stitchwort family was unknown to the general public ten years ago, and now it is seen everywhere, and at every summer flower show it is very much in evidence, both as a setting to the displays of hardy flowers, and as a feature of the table decoration competitions. It is of simple culture, growing in any soil in a sunny position, but only attaining perfection where there is a good supply of lime in the soil, when it forms a bush three feet high, and as many through, covered all over with myriads of tiny white flowers. Its name is formed from two Greek words, meaning "love of lime," and where the soil is not obviously rich in this constituent some lime or mortar rubbish should be added to it before planting.

It is a perfectly hardy perennial, and an unlimited number of plants can be obtained by sowing a small packet of seed in the early spring, and pricking out the seedlings in a prepared nursery bed, six inches apart, where, though the young plants will not appear to be doing much the first season, they will become strong and well-rooted. (N. B.—Be sure you get Gypsophila paniculata, or you may find you have reared plants of an annual kind only.)

In the autumn the plants should be taken up, with a nice ball of earth, if possible, though this is by no means easy, as the roots are long and fibreless, and very brittle. In planting them in their permanent positions space should be allowed them to make bushes three feet in diameter, and they should not be disturbed again. The second summer after sowing, if they were sown early in the spring, and given good treatment, they will make fine specimens, and the third summer be at their best. They need protection from slugs in their young state, as also afterwards, when the shoots are emerging from the ground in the early spring. They are then apt to be grazed off level with the ground, which means the plants will be much later coming into flower, and much less strong, to say nothing of a possible loss if the injury is repeated. A few cinder ashes over the crowns in the autumn is the best safeguard against this, and if the season is wet, some soot should be mixed with the ashes.

The plants need the support of stout sticks, or even short stakes, in the summer time, as each one of the myriad blossoms holds a drop of water even after a moderate shower, and the total weight then is sufficient to bring the whole inflorescence to the ground, even without any wind. As three or four stems will come up from each crown, when the plants get well established, stout sticks should be put to each shoot early in the season, and at a good distance apart, for though the shoots look slender at first, they will produce, later, an abundance of laterals from top to bottom, and each lateral a number of secondary shoots. If more than five shoots come up from one crown, the weakest should be pulled out, as there is not room for more than four or five to develop properly.

From one well-grown plant handfuls of sprays may be picked without spoiling its appearance, if they are carefully cut where thickest. As the laterals reach from the summit of the main stems, right down to the ground, the lowest sprays should be picked first, as a heavy rain beats them on the ground, and renders them useless. If a little superphosphate of lime is applied in the spring, and hoed in round the plants, their vigor and floriferousness will be much increased. Gypsophila has the advantage of lending itself to association with almost all other flowers, and serves as blossom and greenery at the same time. —Gardeners' Magazine.

ORANGE, N. J.

The regular monthly meeting and floral display of the New Jersey Floricultural Society was held May 6. A very practical and concise paper upon "The Commercial Rose from Planting to Cutting" was read by Harry O. May, of Summit, his maiden effort, which was well received and provoked considerable discussion from a large number of members present. The usual display of cut flowers came from Peter Duff, George Smith and William Bennett and plants in pots from D. Kindsgrab, Malcolm MacRorie and Chas. Ashmead. The orchids, Cattleya Mossiae, C. Mendelli, C. Skinneri and Brassavola fragrans, were from the houses of William Barr, of Llewellyn Park, who devotes an entire range of glass to these exotics, grown by Arthur Bodwell. These were of particular interest and were noticed in illustrated articles in the public press. Two new members, Paul Minder, of Newark, and William Reed, who has taken George Smith's place at Colgate's, were elected. A discussion upon new certificates for the society filled out the evening.

George Smith has taken possession of the stand of Massman of East Orange, which he recently purchased.

The Market.

The good prospects for a rattling business which were in evidence last week were of such short-lived duration that it almost took one's breath away to see how prices tumbled. The bright, warm weather brought flowers into bloom by the thousands and they were piled into the wholesale houses by the wagon load. The warm weather seemed to have had a depressing effect on the demand, which for a couple of days dwindled to almost nothing. At present business is much better, there is not so much stock in sight and the temperature is cooler. The hot weather soon made itself seen in the quality of the stock. Roses, especially, are getting small and Beauties are losing color. Carnations, also, are losing size and red ones are beginning to suffer somewhat. There are lots of calla and longiflorum lilies and they sell quite well, but at low prices. Violets have breathed their last and are now out of this market till next fall. Bulbous stock is also about done. Ferns and "green goods" are as last reported.

Various Notes.

G. Bruner's Sons, of this city, have gotten out a little catalogue describing their varied stock of hardy hybrid, perpetual, climbing and tea roses for garden and bedding purposes. They have been in the business for years and their stock is of the best and contains many varieties.

The regular monthly meeting of the Florists' Society will be held Saturday evening, May 14. Nominations for board of directors for the coming year will be in order and our annual picnic will also be talked over. Anyone with some new or novel plan will be welcomed.

M. Heller, of New Castle, Ind., was a visitor. C. J. OHMER.

BRANT & NOE.

A recent visit to the establishment of Brant & Noe, at Forest Glen, Ill., where I met many old friends and made some new ones, was one of my pleasant experiences. Mr. Brant has the happy knack of making visitors feel so much at home that they almost imagine they are there in fact and so feel no compunction in critically examining every house. I felt so and did so, and am pleased to record that their roses, the Beauties in particular, are a revelation. In size, color and shape of bud they are simply perfection. The quantity of high grade long stems they are cutting certainly shows that Messrs. Kimel and Sahn, the managers, are masters of the art.

A finer crop of carnations it has not been my fortune to see this season, and judging from the quality of the young stock they are at present fielding, and the go-ahead way the work is being conducted, it is a good augury for the coming season. RIBES.

COLUMBUS, O.—A new greenhouse will replace the dilapidated structure at City park. Architect Frank L. Packard has charge of the plans. The city has no money with which to build the greenhouse and a bond issue will be necessary.

New York Flower Market.

The first and most desirable floor of the Coogan Building will shortly be fitted up as a flower market. The second floor of this building is occupied by the New York Cut Flower Co., and the third floor is occupied by the Cut Flower Exchange. Concentration of the wholesale portion of any business whatsoever is absolutely necessary.

Here is an excellent chance for Commission Men, Wholesale Florists and Growers to get together under one roof.

The location is the best in the city for the flower business and the rent is reasonable. For further particulars address

Cor. 8th Ave., Room 105.

PIPING FOR STEAM.

We have two houses 16x100 feet, nine and one-half feet to ridge, protected by a shed on one side, other wall four and one-half feet high with eighteen inches of glass below gutter, boiler in a pit six feet deep at the middle of the protected side. How would you pipe for steam? Would it be advisable to run the flow pipe overhead across the two houses? The houses are to be used for carnations and 60 degrees will be required when it is 20 to 25 below zero outside. We have a lot of 2-inch pipe on hand and would like to use as much of it as possible. Please state amount of radiation and capacity of boiler required.

S. O. B.

To heat the houses described to 60 degrees in cold weather at least 900 feet of radiation should be provided. If 2-inch pipe is used it will require a 2-inch riser under the ridge of each house and seven full length returns disposed, preferably, under the benches. Such a plan contemplates 1,600 lineal feet of 2-inch pipe. If it is desirable to run the main riser as indicated a 3-inch pipe should be provided from the boiler to a point directly under the ridge of the nearest house; here a 2-inch pipe should be taken off to run to each end of the house and there divide to supply the seven returns needed in that house. The riser should be continued as a 2-inch from this point to a position directly under the ridge of the most distant house, where it should divide into two 2-inch pipes, one running to each end of this house and returning in the seven 2-inch returns which should be distributed so that at least four of them will be under the bench nearest the outside wall. The grade of the main riser should be so arranged that it will fall to the boiler from the point under the ridge of the most distant house. All other flow pipes should have their highest point directly over the T's, where they leave the large riser. If the main riser is overhead as indicated the feed pipes for each of the houses should be supplied from the main by a short pipe carrying them close to the ridge directly over the main flow pipe and drop from this point toward each end of the house. Carry up a separate pipe for each flow pipe; do not carry up one and use a T at the top of it. Take each flow off the main flow independently of all others. A boiler sufficient to carry these houses will be provided in one having 120 feet of heating surface under five pounds pressure.

The Washington Florists' Club was re-organized and had a rousing meeting last Wednesday evening. William F. Gude was elected president and F. H. Kramer vice-president. Everything looks rosy for the club's future. The committee which had the Philadelphia and Baltimore bowling teams in charge showed the visitors Washington in a sight-seeing automobile and then a sham battle on the monument grounds. This caused the Baltimore boys to go to pieces. Seybold had to be carried off the field. The writer has lost the score, but what's the difference? Philadelphia did the same old thing. After the game the boys told us what a good time they had and how glad they all were to be with us. Mr. Kramer was thanked by all and given a rising vote for his generosity in presenting the cup, as that was the means of bringing all together. After making a blushing, he replied in a very neat speech in Spanish. Mr. Clark, of Clark Bros., sang a Mexican ballad and Geo. Cook sang "Home, Sweet Home" in German. Toast-master Wm. F. Gude made a popular speech on "Where is the proper place to pin flowers on a lady?" a subject which will be taken up at the club's next meeting. After all had had a say we clasped hands and sang "Auld Lang Syne."

The Market.

A week of very seasonable weather has brought in quantities of all kinds of flowers. The wholesalers are loaded down with stock and the usual cleaning up is now a thing of the past. Roses and carnations are a glut and can be had at one's own price. Lilies remain very plentiful and living prices on these flowers are not to be had. Very fine sweet peas, in lavender, pink and white, are arriving in quantities. The demand for medium and short Beauties is heavy. Outdoor tulips and narcissi are arriving and are sold at low prices. Asparagus bunches and strings and smilax are again in heavier supply and prices are nearly normal. New ferns from the south are being received, which are offered at $2 per 1000.

Various Notes.

Mrs. E. A. Williams contemplates erecting several greenhouses at her Knoxville plant.

Jarvis Smith, of A. W. Smith's, is shipping the city store quantities of very choice bulbous stock from his Canfield, O., farm.

B. L. Elliott is cutting heavy on a crop of smilax which is netting him a handsome price.

H. L. Blind & Bros. have a fine lot of hydrangeas just coming on for Decoration day. They have exceptionally good bedding stock this season.

F. Breitenbaugh & Bro. report heavy sales on their Little Beauty fuchsia and other bedding stock.

Theo. F. Beckert is sending the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co. many new and pretty novelties in cut flowers. A small red cape flower is one of his latest productions.

Very choice giant snapdragon and Kaiserin roses are being offered by the same wholesale house.

Fred Reigelmeyer, of A. W. Smith's, is to be congratulated upon the arrival of a little son. The stork also visited the home of Frank Faulk, and left a boy; once again we smoke perfectos on Frank. Hoo-Hoo.

ASPECT.

I would like to ask if it would be advisable to build such a house as is recommended by Peter Fisher or Wm. Sim in a place where the west wind has full sweep, having the houses stand as they recommend, or would it be better to build so the houses will run east and west, with the boiler shed on the west end? What style of house would be best for this location? What is the best size and arrangement of pipes in such a house where the thermometer goes to 15 to 20 degrees below zero? X.

Under the circumstances it would be all right to have the house running east and west, with the boiler shed on the west end. The correspondent does not say what he intends to use the house for, or what temperature he wishes to maintain, neither does he state whether he intends to use hot water or steam, so that it is hard to give the size and arrangement of pipes. Personally I prefer hot water but some give preference to steam and for some crops the latter may be better, only it requires closer attention, and a night attendant must be kept, which incurs an extra expense that is only warranted where the range is large. For a house 33x300 feet, which I presume is the one meant, thirty lines of 2½-inch pipes would, under average circumstances, be necessary with hot water to maintain a temperature of 60 degrees during severe weather. These would be best arranged in coils of six, making three flows and three returns in each coil, and for a house of that length should be connected to the boiler with pipes not less than six inches for flow and return, or two 4-inch pipes could be used for flow and same for return. W. S. C.

OMAHA.

Spring has been very late, but has at last opened and prospects are very good. Cut flower trade is fair, with supply about equal to demand and quality up to the top notch.

A local department store had a "grand sale" on the remnants of W. J. Hesser's palm gardens. In quantity it comprised several carloads. J. H. B.

THE MOST VALUABLE VIOLET TO GROW.

WHILE DOUBLE VIOLETS have been "dumped" in the leading cities, good singles have been bringing good returns to the grower. The popularity of this Violet is astonishing. I have sold in the city of Boston this winter 1 800,000 blooms without having to make any sacrifice. You can do the same if you have good stock. You cannot afford to have poor stock. I have simply the best stock in the country. I will send out in May strong, transplanted stock for which I am now booking orders at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000; 500 at 1000 rate.

A Prosperous Florist is Never Idle

A glimpse into my houses will prove this; even enemies must admit that an unusual amount of work has been done to fill an establishment of so many houses which were emptied at Easter, with such an enormous stock of 150,000 choice bedding plants, an increase of 50,000 from last year, ready now for immediate shipment. Secure bargains for now and Decoration Day.

Hydrangea Otaksa—For out-door planting, 6-inch pots, $3.00 per doz.

Small plants, out of 2½-inch pots, $3.00 per doz.: Petunia (California Giant) and Inimitable Dwarf, Phlox Drummondii Gigantum, Nasturtium (Empress of India), 3-inch pots: Verbena, Sweet Alyssum (Little Gem), Lobelias, Cupheas, Tradescantia, Pyrethrum (Golden Feather), Alternantheras (red and yellow), Dusty Miller, Parlor Ivy and Coleus Verschaffeltii, Golden Bedder and Firebrand.

Don't forget that I am the Moonvine grower of the land; only A. W. Smith's Hybrid Moonvines (Ipomaea Noctiflora) is exclusively the one I grow, and is the only true Moonvine in America, as Mr. Smith has the world-wide reputation of growing the best Moonvine seed. Please bear in mind that this is no Morning Glory, like so many sell for Moonvines, but the pure, white, waxy Moonflowers, as large as saucers, 3-inch pots, $7.00 per 100; 4-inch $10.00 per 100, nicely stalked up.

Watch "ad." for Araucarias, Palms and Ficus in about three weeks. Please send cash with orders. All goods travel at purchaser's risk. My best thanks to my customers for their liberal patronage at Easter.

HEATING.

How much 1-inch pipe will be necessary for a carnation house 17x170 feet? There will be a 2½-inch riser to the far end. Steam heat.

What temperature is best for Crane and Queen Louise?

How much fall must I have for each 100 feet of gutters? How much for 100 feet of steam pipe?

About how many gallons of water will be condensed in the pipes of the above house in twenty-four hours of zero weather.

J. M. K.

At least twelve runs, or 2,040 feet, of 1-inch pipe should be provided for this house. If it were mine, should prefer to use larger pipes on so long a run, 1¼-inch at least, in which case ten runs of pipe will be ample.

We have had good success with Crane in house run 48 degrees at night and about 65 degrees during the day.

A slope of four inches per 100 feet will be sufficient to carry off water from the gutters, but long gutters with this slope should be moderately deep. It is desirable to have at least eight inches' fall per 100 feet in the heating pipes and to see that they are carefully graded.

It is difficult to estimate the condensation from such a plant. Your system with 2,040 lineal feet of 1-inch pipe and 170 feet of 2½-inch pipe should, however, under normal conditions, condense about thirty-one gallons of water per hour.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Last week the weather has been exceptionally fine and we have been plunged from the cold and dreary into balmy summer atmosphere. The consequence is that stuff has been rushed in, completely overwhelming the demand. Especially has this been noticeable in roses. Carnations are overplentiful in color, while most of the white seem to find ready sale. Noticeable among the stock that has been coming into the Toronto market has been the Beauties from J. Gammage & Sons, of London, which have been of exceptionally fine run, stems four feet and very perfect foliage and bloom.

BALSAMS.

When balsams are well grown, they form quite an attractive feature in the cool greenhouse during the summer months, or for bedding, as their flowers comprise many beautiful shades of salmon, scarlet, rose, white, purple and maroon. The blooms somewhat resemble those of a camellia, and some of the blooms out-rival the camellia in beauty. It is very important to secure seed of a good strain, and this can only be attained by dealing with some good firm, as cheap packets of any seed are very dear in the long run.

Cultural details are very simple, but must have attention at the proper time to secure good results. It takes from eight to nine weeks from sowing the seed until the plants come into bloom. The seeds are best sown in 3-inch pots, placing two seeds in each, so that if they both germinate one of them can be removed to give more room to the one left. The soil should consist of loam, leaf-mold and sand, passed through a half-inch sieve, covering the seeds over with about half an inch of the soil, and placing the pots in a little warmth, such as a nearly-spent hotbed provides.

When the seedlings appear, they will require to be kept as near the glass as possible, to keep them stocky and dwarf. The next shift should be into 5-inch pots, using a more substantial compost, such as turfy loam, leaf-soil and decomposed cow-manure. At each subsequent potting the plants should be kept as low down in the pots as it is possible to get them. By this time the plants will do well if placed in a cold frame, on a damp bottom, closing the frames early in the afternoon to retain a little sun-heat, which will assist the plants in making roots in the new soil.

Balsams will require yet another shift when the 5-inch pot is full of roots; 8-inch or 9-inch pots will suit for flowering the plants in, using the same kind of soil as before, but making it firmer. When first potted in new soil, water should be given with great care, but as the pots become filled with roots they require plenty of moisture, with weak liquid manure once or twice a week.

PLEASE MENTION THE REVIEW WHEN WRITING ANY OF THESE ADVERTISERS.

The flowers will require picking off the earlier-formed growths as they make their appearance until the plants are well furnished from top to bottom.—Gardeners' Magazine.

PIPING.

I have a house 11x65, east and west, east end protected by boiler shed, west gable glass, no glass in side walls; sides four feet high, ridge eight feet. How much 4-inch pipe will be needed to maintain 50 to 55 degrees when it is 20 degrees below zero outside? Hot water will be used.

H. F. H.

If you wish to use 4-inch cast iron pipe, as I assume you do in specifying 4-inch pipe, it will require five runs of pipe to maintain the temperature desired. I note a door is indicated at the west end, which it is desirable, I presume, to maintain without pipes crossing it. If so, a good plan will be to carry a riser on the north side of the house under the bench to the west end, there divide into two 4-inch returns to the boiler. A similar riser can be taken from the boiler along the south side of the house to the west end and returned by one pipe. This will give a loop at the south side and a loop with two returns at the north side. The five pipes will thus be supplied. If pipe has not already been purchased I would advise the use of 2-inch screw joint pipe instead of the 4-inch cast. Its first cost will be no more and it is more economically installed. By the use of an expansion tank and a 2-inch riser under the ridge of the house, returning in four 2-inch pipes under each bench, a satisfactory arrangement will be secured. With the 2-inch pipe nine pipes, one under the ridge and four under each bench, will be required.

UTICA, N. Y.

The annual meeting of the Florists' Club of Utica was held May 5 at the home of Frank J. Baker. There was an excellent attendance, about thirty being present. The following officers were re-elected for the coming year: President, Frank J. Baker; secretary, J. C. Spencer; treasurer, C. F. Seitzer. An excellent supper was served, and all the members had a very pleasant evening.

THAT little one-inch advertisement in your valuable paper did the work all right as usual.—J. F. Ammann, Edwardsville, Ill.

We have had several letters from florists in different parts of the country stating that they would like to buy our outfits but consider that they are too far away from Louisville to be able to do so advantageously. This is not the fact. There is no state in this country that has not at least several of our plants. They are so made as to be readily shipped and can be put together by any intelligent workman.

Superior Boilers Are Good Boilers.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.
 "Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers, no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettig.

THE LARGEST ROSE GROWERS IN THE WORLD.

COME TO FLATBUSH

And Be Convinced that you are not going to be Disappointed if you Buy

NEPHROLEPIS SCOTTII.

TO SEE IT IS TO BUY IT.

Awarded S. A. F. O. H. Silver Medal at the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society's Spring Exhibition in Philadelphia, March 24, 1904. Awarded a Diploma by the American Institute, and also received the New York Florists' Club's Highest Award, "A Certificate of Merit."

NEPHROLEPIS SCOTTII

is without a doubt the finest Nephrolepis ever introduced, and is as far ahead of the Boston Fern as the Boston is ahead of all other introductions. It is a rapid grower and to see it in all stages of growth, from a runner in the bench to a 14-inch pot specimen, will convince you that it will positively take the place of its parent, the old Boston Fern.

Unquestionable Testimonials as to its Worth.

Dear Sir:—I like Nephrolepis Scottii very much and wish you would grow 100 specimen plants for me for next Fall delivery: you know about the quality of plants I handle. Yours truly, (Signed) J. H. TROY.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., April 11, 1904.
MR. JOHN SCOTT,
Dear Sir:—You have my order for your new Nephrolepis Scottii. I wish to say here, that I am very favorably impressed by your novelty. I admire its habit and style of growth and consider it the best Nephrolepis variety we have got so far. Yours very truly, (Signed) J. M. KELLER.

WOODSIDE, N. Y., April 5, 1904.
MR. JOHN SCOTT,
Dear Sir:—Please accept my order for 1000 Nephrolepis Scottii at $200 per 1000. I consider your fern as far ahead of the Boston fern as the Boston is ahead of all the recent introductions of Nephrolepis. It has a splendid habit and is a rapid grower and will, I am certain, prove itself a money-maker for any one that buys it. Yours truly,

Dear Sir:—Please reserve for us 150 Nephrolepis Scottii in the sizes as follows, viz., 25, 6-inch pots; 25, 8-inch pots; 50, 10-inch pots, and 50 large specimens.
We think that "Scottii" is far better than the "Boston" in all sizes, and think it will certainly take its place. We have tried all the other introductions, but failed to find them satisfactory for our class of trade. Kindly acknowledge receipt, and oblige. Yours truly,

MR. JOHN SCOTT,
Dear Sir:—We have tried all the new introductions of Nephrolepis and have had to come back to the old Boston again but in the Nephrolepis Scottii we are certain we have at last found the ideal Nephrolepis. It has a grand habit and judging from our observation of it in the past two years, we predict it will prove a seller and a money-maker. Yours truly,

MR. JOHN SCOTT,
Dear Sir:—You have my order for Nephrolepis Scottii. Sorry I cannot devote more place for your new fern. I have observed from time to time its good qualities and consider it will prove a good seller. It is certainly a fern that has come to stay. Yours truly, (Signed) ALFRED ZELLER.

Delivery will be made as follows: Strong transplanted runners from the bench or 2¼-inch pot, delivery commencing June 1; all orders filled in rotation at the following prices: $4.00 per doz.; $25.00 per 100; $200.00 per 1000. Strong 6-in. pot plants now ready, $2.00 each; 8-in. pans, $3.50 each; 10-in. pans, $5.00 each. I have decided to give buyers the option of taking either transplanted runners from the bench or 2¼-in. potted stock.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

DECORATION DAY TRADE.

The Show Window.

Preparation will be the text for to-day's sermon. Begin your advertising a week before Memorial day, and begin at home. There are three methods by which you can cultivate your Decoration day business. The best of all is a good window. Begin a week ahead. As a background for a window decoration, cover the bottom of the window with a liberal amount of flag bunting. As a central point in the window decoration have a stack of guns, with a large loose wreath hanging from it. Tie the wreath with flag ribbon. Set several baskets of snowballs behind the gun stack. Here and there in the upper parts of the window hang a number of different styles of wreaths. These need not be elaborate or costly, or is it necessary to sacrifice many flowers for them. Make one or two of leucothæ sprays, one of each kind of galax, one of laurel, one of ivy and one jasmines, with red and blue ribbon ties. All of these foliage wreaths may be made by braiding the stems as we as children made clover wreaths. If the wreaths are not stiff enough to hold their form, strengthen them with heavy wire, or they may be made upon the same foundation as the Christmas lycopodium wreaths.

The wreath is pre-eminently a Memorial day design. Make it of ferns, smilax, asparagus of any kind, with or without flowers, or all flowers. A foliage wreath with one bunch of flowers tied with a catchy bow will be a taking article. Others may be made with green foundation and a spray of flowers tied on extending a third or half way around the wreath. The spray can be wired on with a No. 36 wire drawn across the wreath frame in two or three places.

As to Advertising.

By a few short write-ups in your local paper encourage school children to carry small wreaths, and have your window decorations suggestive of these styles of wreaths. Learn all you can about the art of drapery. Keep one or two good-sized flags of soft material, silk if you can. Drape one in the window, and at the point where the drapery is caught draw the flag through one of your tastiest wreaths. This will make a pretty end piece for a window or a glass door.

Present the marshall of the day with one of your wreaths to be used conspicuously in the parade. See that it reaches him a couple of days before the event. This will suggest the need of more. All the old soldiers and members of the Relief Corps should carry or wear flowers of some kind. You will be called upon to make boutonnières. One good-sized flower with a spray of green will be found most acceptable. A string of smilax of ordinary size will make three dozen boutonnières. Cut the smilax into pieces of about two joints each, being careful in the cutting to sever the stem at the joints, thus leaving sufficient stem and saving the waste of foliage. If carnations are used, leave the stems about an inch long and wire them firmly onto the smilax stem with a single strand of No. 24 wire held in the left hand as for stemming. No tinfoil or other material is necessary.

Be Ready for the Rush.

Now as to handling the business after we have it. A week's work will be crowded into each of the few days preceding Memorial day, and in order to work to the best advantage one must keep ahead of his orders. Stuff design frames two or three days in advance, keep the top of the sphagnum moist by sprinkling two or three times, and the rest will take care of itself. Smilax and ferns can be put on the frame a day before. Sprinkle these also.

Write up express books, cards, shipping tags, all beforehand. Where one must do many different things and there are not enough people to each have a separate work, the work must be more carefully arranged. A good ready is half the battle. Have all unnecessary articles put out of the way. Clear the work room of everything but what must the certain knowledge that a box of flowers is likely to be pitched from one end of the car to the other, and then some. Carnations may be packed end for end, that is, with heads each way, but roses should be all laid one way, unless there are enough to be packed in a wooden box and cleated across the stems. Turn rose stems end for end in a small box, and they will scratch each other. Keep all lower rose stems from contact with the flowers. In packing roses, to keep the tips of the flower from being crushed if the box is turned on end, place a thick pad of soft paper just inside of the end against which the flowers are placed. Wrap a convenient sized piece of ice in several layers of absorbent paper and pack in among the stems. See that it is secured in place, so that it cannot be tossed about and damage the flowers. If full telescope boxes are not to be had, make extra size of light wood and place either inside of the box or outside under the lid. If a smaller box is required than there is at hand, split up the larger size lengthwise, box and lid, and slip one half, sideways, inside the other, and you have a neat strong box for shipping.

For shipping designs, after finding a box which is a snug fit, run a stout twine up through a hole in the bottom of the box into the bottom of the design frame and down on the opposite side of the frame out through the bottom of the box, and up over the outside. Tie at the top. This will hold the design in place in spite of rough handling.

We use a little schedule for both shipping and city delivery for a busy day. We take a big cardboard and rule it up and down into ten good sized spaces and write large enough so that it can be read at a little distance, for when completed be used for the day. Get up before breakfast. Going into this business means a willingness to keep all kinds of hours, breaking dates for social events, and occasionally sitting up all night, as well as meals at all hours and a placid countenance above the counter withal.

Shipping Hints.

Always advise shipping by express rather than mail. Have paraffin lined, heavy pastboard boxes, full telescoped if possible. Line the box with soft paper and pack it full. Leave no room for flowers to tumble around. Lead your local expressman to think that your boxes must be handled tenderly, but pack with the card is tacked on the wall in the shipping room. The first column we head "Time," and later enter earliest order first. The second column is for the address, the third for the number of the page in the order book. The fourth is headed "Ship, call or deliver," the next "Railroad," the next "Direction," meaning the part of the city; then "express or mail," "card?" "Prepaid?" and finally "Remarks."

If all the orders are entered on this card there can be no confusion or mistake, as frequently happens when the orders are scattered over several pages of an order book which several people are using at once. GERTRUDE BLAIR.

More About the Specialist.

ED. REVIEW: It would appear as if your correspondent was astonished that I should read his article on "the decline of the specialist." Now what is there in this to astonish anyone. I buy the REVIEW to read. I took the liberty to take issue with the writer's views on the subject, because I did not hold the same view as he did, and if I had not read the Editor's note, that he would be pleased to have any reader present his views on any subject treated in the REVIEW, I doubt if I would have had anything to say. As it was I gave my views and meant just what I wrote.

The writer asks me to look up the holiday reports of last year and then go back a number of years and make comparison. This is unnecessary, as the holiday price of an article does not determine whether the season's average price was a fair thing or not. There are but about six holidays in the violet season, and seven months of other days. I have been in touch with the violet market in my vicinity for seventeen years.

I have seen the Hudson river and Philadelphia product sell in the Boston market and cut quite a figure there, but of late years it is hard to give the former away and none of the latter are to be seen. The reason for this is simply that better goods are to be got at home.

The writer again brings up the atmospheric conditions. Now if we could order the weather to come just what we wanted, would there be anything in violet growing?

WILLIAM SIM.

[The REVIEW is always pleased to receive from its readers statements of their experiences, whether they confirm or differ from views expressed in our columns. But discussion should always be dispassionate, else it loses wholly its value.—Ed.]

florist who has built up a business in that line, yet I must agree with the management that forbids the cutting up of the restful green sward for any such thing, or the planting of tree or shrub, except by the superintendent of the cemetery, whose knowledge, taste and judgment must decide whether a shrub or tree is needed for general effect, here, there, or not at all, and after the superintendent gets through with the planting of a newly laid out section it is invariably the "not at all" that is the proper answer to any special request. General effect is the great, or should be, desire of all who are interested in the peace and beauty of a cemetery.

Vases and Their Care.

The wooden rustic vase or basket has steadily gone out of use, for several good reasons. They quickly rot, they have to be stored in the winter unless the ground is perfectly level, there is difficulty in setting them upright and it is not very unusual to see them blown over. The wire baskets set up on stout wire supports are open to several of the same objections as the rustic baskets, but they are more durable and when lined with green wood moss the plants do very well in them, yet they are awkward to handle. The stone vases cut out of a solid piece of granite are the handsomest vases. We see the plants do well in them, providing there is provision made for drainage, which too often there is not. These granite vases are, however, very costly and only very few can or do afford to own them, so we are left to what is now ninety per cent of all the vases in use in our cemeteries, viz., the cast iron of many designs, and the great majority of these are known as the reservoir vase.

The merits or demerits of these supposed self-watering vases we won't go into. For myself I would rather have a vase with good drainage beneath the plants and faithfully watered. The reservoir vase is essentially on the sub-watering principle, a help in very dry weather, but death to the plants if the reservoir is not occasionally emptied. You don't expect to see high colors in such grounds except on the flowers and therefore most of the vases are painted either pure white or a gray or stone color. Occasionally we are asked to paint a vase green and that seems all right. We give an ordinary iron vase a coat of paint for 50 cents. If much neglected, and it needs two coats, then charge $1. This charge may seem below "union wages," but if you send two men out to paint thirty vases in a day you will have made a very fair profit. It does not require the art of a Rubens or Michael Angelo to paint a vase and you have accommodated your customers.

The iron vase has another advantage, it is always made in sections. In the fall, when the plants are no longer sightly, we empty the bowl which held the soil and return it to the vase inverted, which keeps the rain out of the reservoir and gives it the appearance of having some attention and resting for the winter. This bowl is all we have to bring to the greenhouse in the spring when filling. I can remember the time when most of our vases were filled in the cemetery and wagon loads of plants and soil and moss were carted out. It was a poor way to do, costly, usually poorly done, at the sacrifice of many plants. Bring all the vases home and you will fill them quicker, better and in every way more satisfactorily.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

The Cemetery Vase.

Decoration day, or, as it is in many localities called, Memorial day, will soon be here. In more favored climates the bedding plant business may be almost over by that busy day. In our lower lake region it only just begins then. The public know that too often we get a slight frost in the last days of May, yet there is one order that they almost all want filled: "I want my vase filled and looking nice by Decoration day without fail." We live and learn by experience and correct mistakes. Time was when we were too ready to persuade our patrons not to insist that their vases should be filled by Decoration day, that it was safer and better in every way to leave it till June 1 or 2. This was a great mistake, for while we may have avoided a great pressure of business in the last week of May, we were only putting off what could have been done then and crowding into a future week, not only the work that the busy time brought us, but that which was foolishly postponed. We are not singular and in our latitude there is more bedding out done during the first ten days of June than there is before June 1.

We have in years gone by many a time heaved a sigh about 3 o'clock p. m. on Decoration day, and exclaimed in accents more or less loud: "Well, I think there is no promised order neglected," feeling almost so much comforted that you could give the boys and yourself a quarter of a day holiday. Alas, it was but a few hours' delusion, and the real business and hard, long hours for the next fifteen days were to begin on the morrow. Every business has its trials, troubles and hard work, and few have pleasanter associations than ours. Yet when a fair month's work for a dozen men has to be crowded into one week it is trying on the boss, if not the men. The consciousness that you have not filled the order for Mrs. Patience that you put off from last Saturday till next Tuesday with her amiable acquiescence and have still been unable to keep your word is most wearing and trying on any man who wants to keep his promise, and incidentally keep his customers.

The moral of all the above is, don't put off a single order for June 2 which can be safely filled on May 29. So nowadays we fill all vase orders for Decoration day that we possibly can. We encourage our customers to have them out by that day and, although it is not the most lucrative section of the business, it is with many an important branch. There is much detail and "instruction" connected with it, and where you fill 300 or 400 vases to get seventy-five per cent off your hands by Decoration day is a great blessing and will save you much kicking, verbal grumbling and general vexation and irritation.

The Cemetery Rules.

Now just a word about the filling and care of these vases. In cemeteries that are owned by private corporations they may exclude any outside florist from entering the cemetery with plants to fill a vase or basket. These corporations cannot prevent a lot-owner taking in his own plants, purchased from whom he chooses, and as the great majority of cemeteries, both in the largest cities as well as the small, and in the thousands of pretty villages throughout the country, are owned by the community, or what is about the same thing, every lot-owner is a share-holder and the management is in the hands of a board of trustees, there are no such exclusive and arbitrary rules. They are associations with every lot-owner interested in the well-ordered maintenance of this, to many, hallowed ground.

Without rules and strictly kept many of these now beautiful grounds would become abortive conglomerations of disorder and bad taste. Again, some associations allow the lot-owners to make flower beds on their lots. This is good for the

I can also remember when we thought it necessary to erect every spring a temporary structure of hotbed sash so as to give the vases a week's protection and start. You cannot afford to do it. Fill the vases one day, giving them the thorough and important first watering and cart them out the next.

Stock to Use.

The plants we use comprise a considerable variety. To illustrate this I might quote the dialogue that invariably occurs. The customer starts off: "Oh, I want you to fill my vase again and keep it watered." "Yes, sir, any particular style you wish?" "Oh, no, a nice assortment; I will leave that to you." In that case we should book the order as "good mixed." More often nowadays the answer will be: "Yes, I want it filled with the bright pink geranium and the edge of flowering ivy" (ivy geranium), or the order may be "all the dark, scarlet geranium (S. A. Nutt) and green vines" (green vinca) and so on. Situation has much to do with what is suitable. Where large trees often shade part of the day, and perhaps entirely, we use Begonia Vernon, tuberous-rooted begonias, fuchsias and other plants that will thrive without the sun's rays. But too shady a situation is not easily overcome and it is difficult to keep a vase looking good.

Fifteen years ago seventy-five per cent of all the vases, were filled, as we call it, in the mixed style. First a Dracæna indivisa in the center, then a few foliage plants, coleus and achyranthes and half a dozen geraniums of the most robust kinds and two or three variegated geraniums and then round the entire edge of the vase the "vines" and it would take ten to fifteen of these drooping plants to encircle the vase. And you will find that if you charge from $2.50 to $4, according to the size of the ordinary iron vases, that you give your customer full value for his money. In fact, if it was not that you use what you happen to have, clearing up your stock, there would be very little profit in this style of filling.

The drooping plants are vinca, English ivy, senecio, money vine, glechoma, ivy geranium, lobelia, sweet alyssum, Abutilon vexillarium, lophospermum, and nasturtium. If sheltered, most of the above will grow and look fairly well throughout the season, but if exposed and windy and the slightest neglect occurs, the softer plants, such as lobelia, sweet alyssum, senecio and nasturtium, soon get whipped with the wind and become shabby and infinitely worse than nothing.

Our great standby for a vine, when they are asked for, is the variegated and green vinca and for most purposes the latter, which I think is V. Harrisonii, is the best. In some cities the English is grown largely for this vase use. Somehow it never was much used here. It has the advantage, however, of remaining just as good as the day you put it in the vase. You don't expect it to grow much in its cramped position, but it is there with its tough, green leaves through wind, sun and even frost. We know of vases that have looked well filled entirely with tuberous-rooted begonias, where it was not too windy and partial shade. We fill large vases entirely with Caladium esculentum. Sometimes with all coleus and if kept properly pinched they look well in contrast to the surrounding sameness. Vases of dwarf, free-flowering cannas are occasionally seen and look well.

And now we come to the plant of all plants for summer decoration in a cemetery, the zonale geranium. Every year the people are learning that for brightness, durability and continuous good looks there is nothing equal to the zonale semi-double geranium and I think last year seventy-five per cent of all our vases were filled with geraniums alone, mostly one variety in a vase, occasionally with an edge of vinca, but more often with nothing. Encourage this style, for you will have less grumbling to endure, people will be better satisfied throughout the season and, what is of the greatest importance, you will get a good, round price for your plants and labor. S. A. Nutt is the great favorite with many; F. Perkins for a pink; Gloire de France for a beautiful peachblow pink; Alphonse Ricard, brighter scarlet; La Favorite for a white, and Beauty Poitevine for a salmon, and the very ancient Earnest Louth is still excellent. There are many more fine varieties, but whatever you use they should be strong, vigorous growers. Always cover the surface of the soil with green wood moss, both for appearance and as a mulch.

Watering the Vases.

Now we come to watering. I may as well speak plainly and say that where you have 200 vases or upwards there is a good margin of profit if you charge a proper price. We like to water our own vases, for then we are responsible for their welfare, and if we take good care of them the customers will come back. The least that should be charged for watering any vase is $2. We have recently learned that vases have been watered for $1. It can't be done and pay your debts.

It should be needless to say that the soil in the vases should be of the richest and compactly firmed round the plants. This vase business is laborious, yet is soon over and there is a good living profit in it if you don't try and undersell your neighbor.

BRIDGETON, N. J.—Theo. E. Edwards has the contract for the bedding plants required for planting the station grounds of the West Jersey and Seashore Railroad.

THE CARE OF YOUNG STOCK.

To the care and skill bestowed upon young stock for the first few weeks after planting and, indeed, all through the hot season, can be attributed in a great measure the success or failure, financially, of the season's crop. The different operations which I am about to describe have much influence on the formation and development of the plants which have to withstand the vicissitudes of I will not call it the forcing season, but that period during which they require stimulants in the way of food and temperature in order to make them produce crops in sufficient quantity and of such a quality as will leave a handsome margin of profit. Given a good, solid foundation of growth, the after treatment is much simplified.

We all know how much easier it is in point of labor to care for a house containing robust, healthy stock than it is to look after a house of unhealthy or weakly stuff, and if we have to enter on the winter with this latter grade of stock the work and anxiety will be multiplied and in nine cases out of ten the profits and pleasure will be nil. Therefore, after planting, our efforts should be directed to get a good, stocky growth, which should be trained with the object of forming the desired percentage of flower-bearing eyes, having at the same time an eye on the question of quality. To effect this purpose great care and attention must be bestowed upon the cultivation, watering, ventilation, feeding and training of the young plants.

As I mentioned in my notes of last week, cultivation plays a very important part in the successful growing of young stock and should be persisted in each week as long as is found necessary or until the feeding roots approach so close to the surface of the soil that further cultivation cannot be practiced without causing injury.

The intelligent use of water is also of the utmost importance and requires a great amount of study and careful observation to determine the proper amount required by the plant at its various stages of growth, also taking into consideration the varying conditions of the atmosphere, which may one day be surcharged with moisture and the next day evaporation may be so rapid that overwatering may be next to impossible. These conditions should form a very interesting course of study for the student as without this knowledge he is groping in the dark and, however clever he may be in the manipulation of the nozzle, without this knowledge his efforts may often be worse than useless.

The art of syringing properly can only be acquired with a definite idea of the work to be accomplished, and after a long course of earnest study and practice only can he become an expert in the proper use of the hose.

The theory and practice of ventilation, as understood by up-to-date growers, consists in keeping a sweet and pure atmosphere in the house. This atmosphere must at the same time contain sufficient moisture to sustain that well nurtured appearance of the foliage without which no rose, however fine the bud may be, can approach the ideal. To maintain a temperature free from all sudden and extreme fluctuations is also essential to the formation of leaves of a firm texture, which in a measure makes them immune from many troubles, such as black spot, mildew and anthracnose, which readily affect plants which have been coddled until both wood and foliage are soft and spongy and an easy prey.

During the growing period, or when roots, wood and foliage are doing their utmost in the formation of the future flower bearer, if the sod has been of the right quality and has been properly composted, they require very little feeding, especially of that kind of food which has a tendency to produce soft, succulent wood or foliage, such as is supplied by mulching or liquid feeding. A slight sprinkling of bone meal, varied at intervals with a dusting of lime or wood ashes, is amply sufficient until the soil in the bench is well filled with roots, when the exhausted elements will have to be supplied periodically in proper quantities.

As soon as convenient, after planting is finished, the plants should be supported and trained into position in order to give free access of light and air to all the eyes, so that they may be fully developed and ripen equally, keeping each shoot in an upright position without crowding and allowing no branch to trail on the bench, as the eyes formed on such wood are very productive in the formation of blind wood, which, if encouraged to start, is a hard problem for even the most experienced grower to solve after the dark weather commences.

Grafted stock should receive a support as soon as planted, as otherwise the force of water required to make syringing effective is liable to detach the cion from the stock. The best method of supporting roses is still an open question and furnishes a field for profitable experiment. The method at present in use in large growing establishments will be discussed in my next week's article.

RIBES.

PLANTING.

Those growers who figure largely on exhibiting their flowers make a point of planting their stock this month, so as to get the benefit of a long season of growth, which is essential to the production of the very highest grade of flowers. One cannot plant in June or July and produce so fine a grade of flowers as the man who plants in May, all other things being equal.

There is one point to be considered in early planting, and that is the question of head room. You should have anyway six feet of space between the top of the bench and the glass, and even then the varieties need a careful arrangement in planting, so that the tallest are put in the center of the house. In the case of the standard varieties the heights are pretty well known, if the grower has kept, as he should, some memoranda of his plants in previous years. The new varieties offered are, many of them, quite reasonable in the matter of height. Henry Barnes is the tallest and must have lots of head room to do it justice. Next in order come S. T. Wright, Ben Wells and Maynell, with Duckham, Cobbold, Harrison Dick and Mrs. F. W. Vallis all very sturdy and inclined to be medium, and Cheltoni and Donald McLeod very dwarf. Donald McLeod I thought last year was one of the neatest growers I ever saw in a bench, a perfect pyramid of foliage from the soil to the flower.

The question of soil when filling the benches need not, in my humble opinion, give much cause for worry. I would, personally, rather plant in soil inclined to be poor than in soil that has been made too rich. Good sod that has been stacked up long enough to rot and has had, at the time of stacking, a fourth to a sixth of cow manure with it, is about right. Bone can be added to the heap when it is being chopped down and turned over and I always liked to add a little leaf soil when I could get it.

The very best possible thing to run along the cracks for drainage is green sod turned upside down. This affords ideal drainage and as it rots the roots love to ramble in it. Fill the bench level full with soil, then after it has been planted and firmed down it will be just about right. I may say here that I greatly prefer a bench to a solid bed in growing chrysanthemums. In a bench the roots are at all times entirely under control and more liquid food can safely be applied.

In planting run the rows straight down the bench, but set the plants diagonally across it, as each plant by that means gets more room to grow and they are easier to work among. Plant the center row first as a guide, then the outer rows need no measuring to set each plant exactly the same distance apart. The distance apart to set the plants for this early planting should be not less than six inches one way by nine the other for single stem plants, and it may with profit be as much as ten inches each way if you want to raise only the very best. It may look wide at planting time, but one must think of the future, and in September, when a forest of growth has sprung up, things will look very different.

After your bench is planted make the soil around the plants solid, the quickest way to accomplish this being to put a man with reasonably small feet to tramp it down, finishing the odd corners with a brick. This firming of the soil I always considered important and the soil can hardly be made too solid, unless it is wet, and wet soil should never be worked in at all. The idea of making the soil firm is to cause the plant to make a hard, short-jointed growth, which it will not do if allowed to ramble at will in a bed of loose soil.

Once the beds are planted the doors and ventilators should be opened and kept so night and day, excepting, of course, during storms or heavy gales. Once a week the beds should be scratched over to kill the weeds as they germinate and keep the soil from getting sour. Do not neglect this simple job, for while the chrysanthemum needs lots of water when established, it does object to a sour, sticky soil and will show it by a yellowing of the foliage and a generally unhealthy appearance.

Some of the kinds will run to bud, perhaps, after planting, Vivian-Morel, W. R. Church and several other fine varieties showing this peculiarity. In such cases keep the buds picked closely off and in a short time a sucker will come up out of the soil, when the hard, old growth can be cut away and let the sucker run up to make the plant. This is invariably better than trying to coax the older, hard growth to make a good shoot.

It occasionally happens that all of the varieties will run to bud with some florists, but this is due to neglect in watering. When young plants are allowed to dry out a few times they get hard and woody, and while they often recover on being planted out, I have seen plants that absolutely refused to come away and make good growth. The obvious moral of this is, never let the plants receive a check of any kind. The culture of the mum is today well understood and the most successful exhibitors are those who devote the most time to their plants and watch them carefully from the day the cutting is put into the sand until the flower has expanded.

After planting do not shade the house, but on hot days keep a plentiful supply of moisture in the atmosphere by copious spraying and the plants will be all the better for it. If the house is shaded the growth is liable to be too soft, particularly if we get a few days of dull weather, and the thing to aim for during the summer months is a healthy, short-jointed, stocky growth, from which will come the future prize winner.

Laelio-Cattleya Charlesworthi.

LAELIO-CATTLEYAS.

No great effort of memory is required to recall the time when flowering examples of laelias or cattleyas were scantily represented in our orchid houses during the gloomy winter period, for, with the exception of Cattleya Trianae, on the one hand, and Laelia anceps on the other, there are few commendable species that bloom in winter. Now, however, the great blank has been filled, but the hybridists tell us that they have only just commenced, as until recently only the species which, in the case of the small yellow and cinnabar-red flowered members of the laelia family, are not very attractive, were to hand to practice upon. But now, with the resultant hybrids, greater scope, and maybe better results are anticipated. Even if nothing better than the gorgeously colored Laelio-cattleya Charlesworthi, herewith so well figured, had been produced, we should have no just cause for complaint.

Laelio-cattleya Charlesworthi undoubtedly ranks first at present by reason of its floriferous nature, size and color of bloom, freedom of growth and probably too, it having been exhibited in such generous quantities. It is the result of crossing a good form of C. Dowiana aurea with L. cinnabarina, and was raised and flowered by Charlesworth & Co. at Bradford some four years ago. The plant is compact and erect growing, furnished, when in bloom, with a stout scape, bearing from six to ten shapely flowers, which are almost wholly of a deep, rich orange-red, the lip rosy-crimson, prettily veined with yellow. When shown at the Drill Hall on January 23, 1900, it was voted an award of merit.—Gardeners' Magazine.

TULIPS.

I wish you or some other wise man of the craft would tell me what to do for blight on tulips. It appeared first on one bed last year. This year it is on other beds. The leaves appear as if scalded with greasy water; they wilt down and seem to be rotten. It comes on when the leaves are about grown and buds formed. Shall I try Bordeaux mixture or other fungicide? S. J. G.

Here is another question to which I have to reply, briefly, "I don't know." We have been looking up the best modern authorities on this long known and cultivated garden flower and cannot find any reference to any disease that is peculiar to it. And with a good many years of experience with the tulip, both for outdoor beds and forcing during winter and spring, we cannot remember ever seeing the leaves in the condition described above.

Good authorities say that tulips should not be planted year after year in the same soil. Rotation of crops, as in most of our garden products, is proper, yet that alludes chiefly to producing bulbs for flowering the succeeding year, or where, in fact, the same stock would be replanted. If imported Holland bulbs are planted every fall, then the same bed and soil will produce the grandest results for many years. Of that we are certain from experience close at home. Far more important is the quality of the bulb you plant than the texture or richness of soil. One author says: "A light, deep loam with leaf-mold added and some thoroughly rotten cow manure" is the proper soil.

No doubt that would flower them grandly, yet the best tulips the writer ever saw bloom in this country, both for size, height, color and durability of blossom, were planted very late in November when the soil was almost the consistency of mud with rain and snow, and the soil was a heavy clay loam, such a soil as would delight a rose grower. However that was not producing tulip bulbs; it was merely flowering the strong bulb and embryo flower bud stored up by the high cultivation and scientific treatment of the frugal Dutchman.

To allow tulips to grow up through their winter protection of litter, which is usually used in covering the beds, and then from protection to suddenly expose their stems and leaves to a hard frost would be liable to hurt them. This would not be a disease, but bad management, and all covering should be off before much growth has started in the spring. The "scald with greasy water" I cannot account for. W. S.

the packing sheds. For pot plants the houses must each be partitioned to itself, which may in itself lead to different construction from what may be employed in building for cut flower growing.

For the latter at present the tendency is toward building with gutters raised from six to nine feet from the ground, and no partitions between the houses, except when another kind of plant is to be planted. These ranges are economical to build, and are in every way desirable, except that in localities where the snows are frequent and heavy it cannot slide off as it can from detached houses. If there is plenty of land perhaps the most desirable way to build is the long and tolerably wide house each to itself with enough space between the houses to prevent the one from shading that next to it, and a corridor running through the center from one to the other. The length, width and height of these houses may vary according to the builders' fancy, the space between the houses varying according to the house next south of it. In these houses the eaves need not be so high as the gutters in the connected range, five feet being high enough, but there should be glass in the sides both north and south. The glass should come down to a level with the top of the bed or bench, or nearly so. You can provide for side ventilators in these houses, too, which is a great advantage for most plants.

The tendency now seems to be toward the even-span roof, with a pitch of from 40 to 45 degrees, but where the houses are detached, as last described, the ridge may profitably be moved toward the north side, so that three-fifths to two-thirds of the house will be south of the ridge. This will let the sun strike the north wall from under the ridge a little earlier in the fall and keep it there later in the spring, thus giving the north side of the house better light when the days are short. This must not be done, however, when the houses are attached with gutters on account of the shade the houses will throw on those next to them on the north.

Another important point is the location of the boiler shed or pit, as the case may be. Of course, it should be on the north side of the houses and if at all possible it should be at the lowest point, so that the natural flow will be toward it from the houses. When this is the case you will find very little complaint

ARNATIONS

HOUSE FOR CARNATIONS.

Will you please tell me which roof you would advise for a carnation house 22 x 50 feet that must be set east and west, whether three-quarter-span, with the long span to the south, or even span? What pitch of roof would give the best light, what height of eaves and how much glass on sides is needed? Would glass be needed on the north side? Would high beds, say a foot or more from the ground, filled to within six inches of the top with brickbats, be any improvement over wooden benches two and one-half feet high? Should there be any pipes under the benches for carnations? I am a beginner and have received much valuable information through your paper, and would thank you for this. G. W. P.

In answering the questions regarding plans for a carnation house many things must be taken into consideration. Too often too little forethought is given to what the future may bring in the way of expansion in business and the necessity of adding greenhouses in a few years. If you mean to build the one house and have no intention of ever adding another it should not be a difficult matter to plan the construction of it, but since I suppose it is to be used for commercial growing it would be poor policy to build so that you could not add onto it to advantage in the future. In going about among the greenhouses in our larger cities you will find many old places of which a birdseye view would remind you of a crazy quilt, with the houses running in every direction. In those days most of the florists started in a small way and apparently most of them had no idea of growing into such large establishments as many of them now are. The two or three little houses were squatted down wherever it seemed handiest to have them and when, after a year or two of hard work and saving, the business grew enough to demand another house and the purse was able to pay for one, it was often found that if they had expected to add to their place they would have built different houses or built on another place, etc. But another house had to be built and it again was stuck onto the original block somewhere and some way, often without any consideration for the future.

It is not so these days. When a grower plans to start a new range of glass he lays his plans for many years into the future, or at least he plans to do nothing which may hinder him in building as he finds best in the future. You can never tell how well you may prosper and it is well to set your aim and lay your plans high enough. Then, again, it is well to take into consideration what you intend to grow. Is it to be mainly cut flowers or is it to be mostly pot plants? For pot plants you do not want too large houses, but rather medium-sized ones, and more of them, while for cut blooms the tendency at present (and I think with good reason), is toward large houses, long, wide and high. These large houses are lighter and roomier than the smaller ones and with the same effort on the part of the grower will produce superior stock, but with the much necessary shifting around and the many different temperatures required by the pot plants it is necessary to have several houses and all parts convenient to about the water not returning to the boiler. I know full well that this is not always possible, but when it is possible it certainly is always preferable. The old way of running a work shed along the east or west end of the houses is a bad one. All sheds or dark buildings should be north of the greenhouses, if at all possible. And still worse than the above is the shed running north and south between two rows of houses. You can never grow as good stock in that end of the house which butts against a shed as you can fifty feet away.

The Logan Berry Trained to Trellis.

This answer has lengthened out more than I intended it should when I began, but this thing of starting a new place is a subject which cannot be given too much thought and study. G. W. P. will find all his questions answered in the above, except the one regarding solid beds and benches. We prefer the solid beds and we have only a couple of raised benches left in our cut flower houses. We use cinders in the bottom of our beds and the top of the side board is about fifteen to eighteen inches above the paths. We would not care for brickbats or anything very large to fill up with, as the soil would likely wash down between, unless there could be a layer of gravel or cinders on top. Gravel is as good as anything you can get, but it costs a good deal when you have to buy it. We use the cinders from our boilers, and find them first class as a drainage, after they have lain out in the weather a few months. There should be no heating pipes laid in these beds, but arrange to either hang them all overhead or lay them in the paths. A. F. J. BAUR.

THE SLEEPY ENCHANTRESS. =

Having read and heard, but not witnessed, so much about the beautiful Enchantress "sleeping," thought it would not more than justify this variety to give our experience. We only have a small space, probably 200, in this variety, and with us it is second to none, in productiveness, keeping qualities and the price realized. We have kept them easily over ten days, and they would have kept "awake" a good while longer had they not caught the eye of some lover of this beautiful variety. Not only our own grown have had such keeping qualities, but have had shipments from the J. D. Thompson Carnation Co. which really astonished us. Now, can any of your readers explain why this is? Is it feeding to excess that causes them to sleep, or are they allowed to open too far? We very seldom feed. Probably we would feed more if we had the time, but would rather sleep this time ourselves than to feed to excess, and then find the carnations and ourselves all sleeping. We find that by cutting them a little over half open, they open and last very nicely. There is nothing that has taken so well in the Louisville market for many years, and we expect to plant all we can find room for. Had no special reason for writing these few words, but would like to know why the "big fellows" can't succeed, while us "farmers" are "right there with the goods."

Fruit of the Logan Berry Nearly Natural Size.

THE LOGAN BERRY.

There seeming to be some difference of opinion as to the origin of this berry, we give the facts herewith from first hands.

The Logan berry was the result of a cross between the California wild blackberry and a raspberry, and it originated on the grounds of Judge J. H. Logan, Santa Cruz, Cal.

The accompanying photograph shows the blossom and the berries in various stages, all life size. It is a very handsome berry, but is much more acid than the blackberry, and is apt to be more useful for cooking and preserving than as a table berry. But for those uses it is unsurpassed, and is by many esteemed as a fresh fruit for the table.

We present other photographs showing the method of training the vines and the same plants when in bloom a little later. This patch contained a thirteenth of an acre and produced at the rate of a ton of fruit to the acre.

When the merits of this berry first became generally known a good deal of trash was sold by irresponsible people as the true Logan berry, in some cases most any bramble from the woods being pressed into service, and in this way the name came into disrepute. The true Logan berry is well shown in our illustration and the picture may be accepted as accurate and thoroughly representative.

Though Judge Logan is not a nurseryman and does not sell his productions, he has done considerable in the way of improving small fruits. A notable improvement in the blackberry known as the California Mammoth is a cross between the wild California blackberry and one known as the Texas Early. The fruit is fully as large as that of the Logan berry, and even longer, some specimens having measured fully three inches in length. This blackberry promises to have a great future as a table berry, as its flavor is excellent and the plants seem quite as prolific as those of the Logan berry.

WORLD'S FAIR FLORAL EXHIBITS.

The following tentative schedule for floral exhibits has been issued by the Department of Horticulture of the St. Louis World's Fair and Chief Taylor hopes to be able to make an authoritative announcement covering all of these days and three or four in addition:

May 23-28—Peonies.
May 30-June 4—Open.
June 6-11—Hardy roses.
June 13-18—Sweet peas.
June 20-25—Sweet peas.
June 27-July 2—Cannas.
July 4-9—Cannas.

July 11-16—Cut flowers (florists).
 July 18-23—Cut flowers (amateurs).
 July 25-30—Open.
 Aug. 1-6—Gladioli.
 Aug. 8-13—Asters.
 Aug. 15-20—S. A. F. week general decorations.
 Aug. 22-27—Gladioli.
 Aug. 29-Sept. 3—Gladioli.
 Sept. 5-10—Tuberose.
 Sept. 12-17—Dahlias.
 Sept. 19-24—Dahlias.
 Sept. 26-Oct. 1—Aquatics.
 Oct. 3-8—Flower show by St. Louis Florists' Club.
 Oct. 10-15—Open.
 Oct. 17-22—Wild flower show.
 Oct. 24-29—Natural decorations by children.
 Oct. 31-Nov. 5—Open.
 Nov. 7-12—Pot chrysanthemums.
 Nov. 14-19—Cut chrysanthemums.
 Nov. 21-26—Open.

All exhibits in these shows will be eligible to examination for awards of diplomas and medals. There is no entry charge and flowers sent with all charges prepaid, addressed to Frederic W. Taylor, chief, Department of Horticulture, St. Louis World's Fair, will be received and staged by the department without any additional cost to exhibitors. Vases and other facilities will be provided by the department.

The space assigned to the flower exhibits is most beautifully located, being on a floor nine feet lower than that on which are all the pomological exhibits. The point of view from all four sides is perfect and every effort is being made by the management to have these flower shows such great features of the exposition as to entitle them to be considered as leading attractions. This means that newspaper accounts of the exposition will give much space to them and thus secure to exhibitors the very best possible kind of advertising. Full announcements will soon be made by special circulars from the department. The chief of the department invites correspondence and suggestions, particularly with reference to whether any of the days set should, with due consideration for Vegetable Forcing.

THE MARKETS.

CHICAGO, May 18.—Radishes, 25 to 45c dozen bunches; lettuce, head, 50 to 75c bushel; leaf, 15 to 25c case; cucumbers, 30 to 60c dozen.

NEW YORK, May 16.—The week has been characterized by a general decline in prices. The heavy southern shipments force down prices on greenhouse stock, but home-grown lettuce still brings $1 to $3 per barrel.

BOSTON, May 17.—Heavy supplies of all kinds of produce are now coming forward and, although trade is brisk, prices are lower all around. Cucumbers are steady at $1.50 to $3 bushel; best tomatoes bring 25c pound; mushrooms scarce at 75c pound; lettuce in strong demand at 25 to 60c dozen; radishes, 25c dozen; parsley, 75c bushel. Rhubarb and asparagus are now in abundant supply from outdoors. A few hot-house grapes and peaches were noted the past week.

MELONS FOR MARKET.

The cultivation of melons in winter does not seem to have been taken up to any great extent, as an article of commerce, though in private gardens, where the greenhouse plant is of sufficient extent, more or less of them are usually grown. The private gardeners claim that this fruit is very much appreciated by their employers, and I do not see why they should not become a good, marketable article when once a trade was established for them. To make them a paying crop the price required would be higher than the average man would care be about 7 cents each or $3.50 per plant. To get a paying price for melons on the same basis, the grower would have to get about 60 cents each for them and there is no reason why fruits averaging two and one-half to three pounds each should not command that price when once a demand was created.

The cultivation of melons does not vary much from that of cucumbers; they require about the same atmospheric conditions but a slightly higher temperature. The seeds are probably a little harder to start, requiring a brisk bottom heat, but once the plants are started much the same treatment will suit both. When planting, the benches should not be filled up but the plants should be set in hills of a few shovelfuls of good, turfy loam, to which has been added about a sixth part of well-rotted barnyard manure. More of this compost can be added as the plants require it, or when the roots begin to appear on the outside of the hills. Planting thus in hills obviates to a large extent the danger from damping at the necks, to which the plants are often subject, and as an extra precaution a little finely broken charcoal should be put around the necks of the plants.

Different ideas exist regarding the method of training, but the one I have adopted is what might be called the double-stem system. For this the points of the plants are pinched out when about six inches high and two stems taken away. These are trained up to the trellis, eighteen inches apart, the plants being set at three feet. If female (or pistillate) flowers appear on the leaders they should be taken off and the lateral or side shoots depended on to produce the fruit. If only a few flowers appear at one time, even on the lateral shoots, it is better to remove them and wait until a sufficient number can be got at one time, or within a day or two of one another. Then pollinate by hand to insure a set. If only one or two fruits were set at one time they would run away with the supply of nutriment and no more fruit could be set on the plant. Fruit can usually be set on the second or third axil of the lateral shoots and once they are set the point of the shoot should be pinched out two eyes beyond the fruit, all growth appearing after that being pinched out and the leaders stopped when they reach the top of the trellis, which, to give them ample space, should not be less than five feet in height.

The trellis should run parallel with the glass and far enough away so that the foliage will not come in contact with it. A good, strong trellis is necessary to support the weight of the plants and fruit and additional support must be provided for the latter, as they attain size, as their own weight would break them loose. A sling, constructed of cords or similar material, strong enough to support the fruit will answer the purpose, but the fruit should be moved around a little occasionally, so that the cords will not mark it by its being allowed to rest always on the one place.

I prefer the English type for forcing. Of this there are a number of varieties, but the latest I have tried is Royal Favorite and I find this a very good one.

to pay. This price is necessary on account of the limited amount of fruit a plant will produce. To make a comparison with cucumbers: Taking the average yield all through the season, a fair yield for a cucumber plant would be about fifty fruits where with a melon plant from six to eight would be a fair average. The average price for cucumbers, taking the season through, would

NEW IRRIGATING DEVICE.

The accompanying illustrations are from photographs taken in greenhouses in which what is known as the Skinner irrigating device was in operation. The lettuce house is that of John A. Heyl, of Troy, O., and the rose house one at the establishment of the Springfield Floral Co., Springfield, O. It is a difficult matter to photograph the system at work in a greenhouse, as the water is broken up into such fine spray that it appears only as a mist, as is shown in the rose house. But the lettuce house shows the apparatus at work in particularly good shape, for the camera was above the sheet of water, upon which the sun was shining.

It is not claimed that this system will do for any or all crops in a greenhouse; certainly not where a house contains several varieties of plants, each requiring different treatment as to water. But tests show that it will be valuable where the house is planted all to one thing, particularly if it is a house which is large enough to give the water a chance to scatter. It promises to be fine for lettuce and other vegetable houses; also for rose, carnation and chrysanthemum houses, up to the point where the blooms are endangered, for fern houses and many other indoor purposes. Not only can the watering be done quickly and without labor, but an even degree of moisture can be maintained for a long period without packing the soil in the bench, if the crop likes a loose soil.

The same nozzle is used for greenhouse work as for outdoor irrigation, except that it has a smaller opening, sixty-four of these being equal to a 1/4-inch nozzle. The nozzles must be placed in an absolute line on the pipe. To break the water an attachment of spring brass may be slipped on the nozzles, each being like the other, so that the water is kept in line and under control. The pipe may be easily adjusted so that any part of the bench can have more water, or so that the whole bench is watered the same. One pipe waters two benches, one on each side, but two pipes are required for each house. Brass unions and galvanized pipe must be used so the nozzles will not stop up. Any number of houses up to the limit of the water supply can be watered at once.

That the system is eminently practical for outdoor use has been already proven by many growers. Hackburn & Willett, of Newbern, N. C., used a lawn sprinkler set every twenty feet and it cost them $100 an acre for nozzles and valves. Last December they tried the Skinner patent and have since ordered 5,500 nozzles of him. Last fall a gardener at Dayton, O., equipped a small plot of ground and now many of the others are taking it up.

C. W. Ward, of the Cottage Gardens, Queens, N. Y., is putting in several acres, which will be under the supervision of the New York Experiment Station and will be tested with the ditch system. The water will be all metered and a record of soil temperatures kept.

The Market.

The market during the past week was a repetition of its predecessor and warm weather, tremendous shipments and limited demand made it a serious proposition to dispose of the supply at any price. This condition of things was all the more to be lamented when the splendid quality of the stock was considered. Saturday saw a slight improvement and the high grades appreciated slightly in value. The present week opens with a spring chill in the air and lesser shipments, and there will be probably no cutting of rates that now prevail until after Decoration day.

Horticultural Society Meeting.

The fifth annual meeting of the Horticultural Society of New York was held last Wednesday and Thursday at the New York Botanic Garden. The annual meeting took place on Wednesday. The membership of the society is 201. Its work will be continued during the summer in the way of excursions to places of horticultural interest. The treasurer's report shows a balance of nearly $1,000 in its favor.

The American Peony Society was invited to hold its first annual meeting and exhibition with the Horticultural Society on June 8 and 9, on which occasion strawberries, roses, flowering shrubs and vegetables will be exhibited. The old officers were re-elected and John H. Troy added to the members of the council. A large exhibition is expected in June. The exhibits this year excelled those of 1903 in quality. The prize of $50 for the best horticultural novelty was awarded the F. R. Pierson Co., of Tarrytown, for its heavily crested, improved Piersoni.

Siebrecht & Son made a fine display in the plant classes, having a splendid collection of palms, foliage and flowering plants, orchids, ferns and crotons. They also exhibited a grand vase of Liberty roses and also of Killarney. This firm also showed a collection of thirty varieties of cut flowers of stove and greenhouse plants.

Weinberg & Padrock, of Woodside, exhibited succulent plants. H. T. Clinkaberry, of Trenton, showed the yellow calla. J. H. Troy had Dorothy Perkins rose and Frank Weinberg a phyllocactus. The group of Scottii ferns in 6 to 12-inch pots formed one of the most attractive features of the exhibition. Mr. Scott will have a fine exhibit of this fern at the St. Louis convention.

The lecture on Wednesday afternoon, by J. Horace MacFarland, of Harrisburg, Pa., was greatly appreciated and intensely interesting. It was illustrated by many beautiful stereopticon views, showing the unfolding of the flowers of our common native trees, the subject of the address being "Common Trees and Their Uncommon Flowers." An enthusiastic vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer. A repetition of the lecture in the rooms of the New York Florists' Club during the coming season would provide a larger and more appreciative audience.

Various Notes.

Preparations are already in progress for the great horticultural and agricultural exhibition to be given by the American Institute of New York November 8 to 17. The Herald Square Hall, the largest for the purpose in America, has been chosen for the show. Silver cups, medals and diplomas in all classes will be awarded, as well as over $4,000 in cash prizes. The special feature of the first week will be the chrysanthemum show. The directors of the Institute are exceedingly enthusiastic and are determined to make this the greatest exhibition of its kind ever given in America.

The New York Flower Market begins to look better than a dream. The proposed building will be a handsome structure. It is favored by all the city's leading officials. The market will cover a big space and will be built two stories in height, with every convenience that Covent Garden, of London, furnishes, with modern additions that will attract many branches of the trade to a representation there. Consummated, it will be a monument to John Birnie's persistency and energy.

The second Monday in June the club's last meeting until September takes place and in addition to the peony exhibit it will be ladies' night and a midsummer banquet for the fair sex will make the evening one of special interest. Provision will be made for an attendance of 300.

The route chosen for the St. Louis convention will be announced at this meeting, and there seems every probability of the usual eastern contingent attending. Some fear has been expressed as to the lack of suitable accommodations, but I am confident Brother Beneke and the balance of the big hearted Missourians will "show" the New Yorkers what rest and comfort mean, notwithstanding the disadvantages of crowds. I am confident the welcome will be warmer than the weather, and if the St. Louis brethren will announce soon the desirable and possible places of refuge selected, prior arrangements can be made.

The sympathy of the trade goes out to President Frank H. Traendly, in the death of his only boy, which occurred last week, the funeral being held on Friday, from the residence, 421 Third street, Brooklyn, to Greenwood cemetery. Many floral tokens of regard were sent by friends.

Ralph, son of J. J. Perkins, is slowly improving in health in the Adirondacks. On account of his manager's long illness, Mr. Perkins has decided to dispose of his branch store on West Thirtieth street.

The wholesalers on Monday began the early closing movement, making 6 p. m. the hour until July 1. During the summer an effort is being made to secure the co-operation of all in a half holiday concession, a scheme that could easily be made possible and profitable during July and August.

John B. Nugent, of Young & Nugent, has been ill for a week with tonsillitis, but is on deck again.

Wm. Ghormley is confined to his home in Mt. Vernon by a severe attack of rheumatism.

The three representatives of R. M. Ward & Co. have completed their season's travel and report a very successful year's business.

Bowling.

The New York Bowling Club decided at its last meeting to change the night of bowling to Tuesday evenings. The new alleys are on Twenty-third street, near Sixth avenue, in the old Koster & Biel building, most convenient for all, and on an evening when the majority of the club members will find it possible to be present. A large turn-out of all the old members and their friends next Tuesday evening is requested. A handsome prize will be given the member making the greatest score. Some arrangement as to the members to represent the club at St. Louis will be made and the prospective challenges from Washington, Philadelphia, Flatbush and the Morris County Gardeners' clubs considered. The changes as to evening and alleys have been made to meet the wishes of the majority and every member who has any interest in the club's welfare is requested to show it practically by being at this meeting. The scores on Monday evening were creditable, the attendance light. They are as follows:

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The market situation here remains about the same as last reported. Stock of all kinds is still in great abundance. The overstock seems to be in all lines and it is very difficult to move any of the surplus. It is only with great inducements that the wholesaler can sell his stock in large quantities and at greatly reduced prices. There was a little more work on hand the past week in funeral designs and that is about the only kind of trade reported. Weddings and dinners are only on a small scale.

Roses are still very much overstocked, but of fair quality. The cool nights have mildewed some of the best stock. The price runs about the same, for the choice from $4 to $6 and from $1 to $3 for seconds. Beauties of extra quality are keeping up fine, at $2 to $2.50 per dozen. Kaiserins are good, but suffer in price with the others. The same can be said of carnations; they continue to move slowly at $2 per 100 for the very best and good stock in all varieties can be bought at $1. White, of course, sells the best; pink and red are badly stocked up and the dump pile is filled with wasted stock. Street fakirs are buying up good grades at $5 per 1,000. Sweet peas have extra fine, long stems and more in than the market calls for. Lilac, cape jasmine and valleys are plentiful and sell at very cheap prices. Harrisii and calla lilies are still abundant at $8 per 100. Plenty of greens of all kinds are in the market this week, at their usual price. Common ferns are again at their old price.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Florists' Club was held Thursday, May 12. The May meeting is always poorly attended, so not many were expected, still twenty members were on hand. All committees were held over for the June meeting, as none were ready to report. A. G. Ahner, of Kirkwood, and John Connon, of Webster Grove, were elected to membership. George M. Kellogg, of Pleasant Hill; P. Roper, of the Missouri Botanic Gardens, and Adolph Brix made applications for membership. The chair appointed F. J. Fillmore, O. G. Koenig and E. W. Guy a committee to draw up resolutions on the death of our fellow member, John Young, which were as follows:

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God to take from our midst our much beloved fellow craftsman, John Young, and while bent with sorrow we humbly acknowledge His holy will, therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of our fellow craftsman the club has lost a faithful worker and we, the members, a loving and sincere friend, and be it further

Resolved, That we extend to them our heartfelt sympathies as a body in this their hour of sad bereavement.

To Paul Roper was voted the scholarship at the Missouri Botanic Garden left vacant by Mr. Gilles, who resigned a few weeks ago. Mr. Collins, of Chicago, was the other applicant.

F. W. Ude, Jr., led a discussion on "Growing Violets," which was very interesting. This was participated in by Messrs. Fillmore, Kellogg and Dunford. In the course of the discussion Mr. Kellogg said it paid him for his trip to attend this meeting, as he had learned a great deal on violet growing and especially on the soil and watering. N. R. Cook, of Pawtucket, R. I., was a visitor and from his remarks was much pleased and glad he attended. At the next meeting of the club, June 9, there will be "something doing" that will please the members. Mr. Thompson has been requested to give us a talk on cacti and Emil Schray will read an essay on "Outdoor Stock for Summer Blooming," also Fred Ammann's paper on "Replanting Rose Stock," left over from this meeting. Mr. Ammann being away on a visit to Springfield, Ill.

Various Notes.

Phil Scott and wife, of Denver, are taking in the World's Fair. Phil expects to return home this week but Mrs. Scott will remain over with relatives for six weeks longer.

D. Newsham, of New Orleans, is back with two carloads of plants for the Louisiana state building in the World's Fair.

Frank H. Weber, vice-president of the American Association of Nurserymen; reports that he will preside over the meetings of the association at Atlanta, Ga., next month in place of President N. W. Hale, of Knoxville, Tenn., who is reported very sick and unable to attend the meeting. Mr. Weber also reports that his firm received 20,000 hardy roses last week in good condition and all hands are busy planting.

T. W. Brown, the English landscape gardener, and his assistant, R. J. Mohr, have the flower beds and lawn in fine shape around the British building. This place is one of the big attractions at the World's Fair. Harry Rieman is no longer connected with this department. Fred Walz has been retained.

Edward C. Buechel, secretary of the Reissen Floral Co., was subpoenaed to serve as a juror the past week. Mr. Buechel failed to show up in time and was fined $10 by the presiding judge. Ed claims too much business that morning.

The Mexican display of 20,000 cactus plants is almost ready in the Horticulture building. This will be a grand attraction.

Chief Hoo-Hoo is now safely in his quarters at the World's Fair. I wonder if he is any relation to our Pittsburg friend, who will be glad to see him next August.

Chief Kessler, of the landscape department at the World's Fair, states that except in a few cases no barriers will be placed on any of the lawns, only around the sunken, cascade and the big gardens near the Transportation building, where chains will be suspended as a sign, which the people will respect.

Robert Tesson is seldom seen in the city these warm days. He is too busy on his ginseng plantation at Clayton. Before the next convention in August we expect Robert to get busy.

The convention of the American Park and Outdoor Art Association and American League of Civic Improvements, will be held in the Minneapolis and St. Paul building, in Model street, at the World's Fair, June 9 to 11. Mayor Wells, Park Commissioner Aull and Prof. William Trelease, of the Missouri Botanic Garden, are perfecting arrangements for their entertainment.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Since last report the market has shown a very gratifying turn for the better, not that any unusual activity is apparent, but the unwieldy surplus has been cut down to something like the needs of the season and the wholesalers are no longer wholly at the mercy of the Greeks in the matter of clearing up on the staples. Several days of unusually cool weather have no doubt assisted in reducing the receipts and replanting the rose houses is well under way with many growers, which makes an appreciable difference. Buds are, of course, smaller than earlier in the season, but color is fair. There is good stock in plenty for all legitimate requirements. Carnations are shipping better than they did in the recent hot weather and there is still plenty of good stock, but the receipts are held so well in hand that all command some sort of a price.

There are still too large supplies of callas and Easter lilies and considerable waste. Valley moves slowly. Kennicott's at Carbondale, are sending in irises, but they sell slowly. Narcissi are a drag. Sweet peas and pansies are plentiful. Good lilac is slow sale; so is cape jasmine. All the other miscellaneous items are abundant, with no steady market.

Decoration Day Prospects.

All thoughts are now centered on Decoration day, which has become of very great importance in this market. Although stock has shortened up materially this week, every one expects ample supplies; a few warm days will bring on a big cut again. However, early orders are always advisable. Decoration day is essentially an occasion for cheap prices and advance quotations show little if any advance over current rates. But there are those who think the call for ordinary grade carnations may bring an advance on late orders.

It is noteworthy that where local peonies are often in full supply for Decoration day, this year we shall have to do business on the southern cut. Old Red is just coming from southern Illinois, while usually the main crop is pretty well cut by this date.

There is evident anxiety on the part of Texas and Alabama dealers to move the cape jasmines and unusually large quantities are already in the market. No matter what may turn up short for Decoration day, there will be plenty of capes, and of good quality.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club held its first Thursday evening meeting May 12 in the new hall, the attendance being rather light. The president appointed a committee on co-operation with the Horticultural Society as follows: J. C. Vaughan, C. L. Washburn, Leonard Kill, N. J. Wietor, John Poehlmann. The committee will have charge of the club's interests in the autumn flower show and will play an important part in making it the best show ever held in Chicago. The committee on revision of the by-laws reported lack of progress and was instructed by the chair to "get busy" before the next meeting, May 26. The new certificates ordered by the club were on exhibition and were pronounced a handsome piece of printing.

Some time ago the secretary of state at Springfield declared the club's charter forfeited for failure to file an affidavit, as required of corporations, showing that it was not a member of any trust or combination! This was not discovered for some time, but the reinstatement of the charter has now been secured by friends of the club without the reincorporation which was at first feared to be necessary.

The Fall Show.

Plans are well under way for the fall exhibition of the Horticultural Society of Chicago, the premium list for which is expected to be ready for distribution this week. As was announced in the REVIEW some time ago, the hall selected, or really three or four halls practically as one, is at the ninth floor of the Fine Arts building and Auditorium Hotel, the two buildings being connected on this floor. It seems an ideal location, even better than the Auditorium theater and at a fraction the expense, which will be a relief to those in charge of the financial end of the show. The visitors will be carried to the exhibition floor by the three large elevators in the Fine Arts building and the exit will be through the Auditorium Hotel elevators. There are two large freight elevators for the handling of exhibits. The date of the show has not yet been fixed, but it will be about the middle of November, a week after the presidential election.

Various Notes.

John Welter has leased the Jacob Phillip place at Rogers Park and will take possession about August 1. The place is now in carnations and there are 50,000 plants in the field for next season's planting, but the new proprietor expects to put the whole place in lettuce. Another Rogers Park carnation establishment recently changed hands by lease, Albert Lies taking the Paul Gaertner place. Mr. Gaertner will go into other business.

John Muir has a conservatory in course of erection at his new place at Forty-seventh and Grand boulevard. He expects to move about June 1.

The Gloede Floral Co., at Evanston, is sending the E. F. Winterson Co. some remarkable Flora Hill carnations. They

The Mexican display of 20,000 cactus plants is almost ready in the Horticulture building. This will be a grand attraction.

Chief Hoo-Hoo is now safely in his quarters at the World's Fair. I wonder if he is any relation to our Pittsburg friend, who will be glad to see him next August.

Chief Kessler, of the landscape department at the World's Fair, states that except in a few cases no barriers will be placed on any of the lawns, only around the sunken, cascade and the big gardens near the Transportation building, where chains will be suspended as a sign, which the people will respect.

Robert Tesson is seldom seen in the city these warm days. He is too busy on his ginseng plantation at Clayton. Before the next convention in August we expect Robert to get busy.

The convention of the American Park and Outdoor Art Association and American League of Civic Improvements, will be held in the Minneapolis and St. Paul building, in Model street, at the World's Fair, June 9 to 11. Mayor Wells, Park Commissioner Aull and Prof. William Trelease, of the Missouri Botanic Garden, are perfecting arrangements for their entertainment.

One of the most notable displays in the Horticulture building is the display of Oklahoma, which is composed of peaches, apples, pears and grapes. One jar contains Chinese cling-stone peaches twelve inches in circumference. The display is attracting a great deal of attention.

The St. Louis Ladies.

The St. Louis Ladies' Bowling Club is making great preparations to entertain the ladies who will attend the S. A. F. convention next August. The photograph reproduced in this issue shows the ladies' organization as it was gathered for practice recently.

In the center row are Mrs. F. C. Weber, Miss L. Meinhardt, Miss Juengel, Mrs. John Steidle, Miss Tillie Meinhardt, Mrs. J. J. Beneke, Miss Bertha Meinhardt.

In the lower row are Miss Schnell, Mrs. Emil Schray, Mrs. D. Schueze, Mrs. F. H. Meinhardt, Mrs. F. M. Ellis and Mrs. Carl Beyer.

Bowling.

The cold and rainy night kept some of the bowlers from attending, each team being one man short this week. The scores were as follows:

THE CHRYSANTHEMUM MANUAL.

Send 25 cents in coin or postage stamps to the FLORISTS' REVIEW and we will mail a copy of Smith's Chrysanthemum Manual, the up-to-date work of eighty pages, just published.

EATON, O.—S. J. Galloway reports that on the morning of May 16 frost did much injury to outdoor stock, peonies especially.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Since last report the market has shown a very gratifying turn for the better, not that any unusual activity is apparent, but the unwieldy surplus has been cut down to something like the needs of the season and the wholesalers are no longer wholly at the mercy of the Greeks in the matter of clearing up on the staples. Several days of unusually cool weather have no doubt assisted in reducing the receipts and replanting the rose houses is well under way with many growers, which makes an appreciable difference. Buds are, of course, smaller than earlier in the season, but color is fair. There is good stock in plenty for all legitimate requirements. Carnations are shipping better than they did in the recent hot weather and there is still plenty of good stock, but the receipts are held so well in hand that all command some sort of a price.

There are still too large supplies of callas and Easter lilies and considerable waste. Valley moves slowly. Kennicott's at Carbondale, are sending in irises, but they sell slowly. Narcissi are a drag. Sweet peas and pansies are plentiful. Good lilac is slow sale; so is cape jasmine. All the other miscellaneous items are abundant, with no steady market.

Decoration Day Prospects.

All thoughts are now centered on Decoration day, which has become of very great importance in this market. Although stock has shortened up materially this week, every one expects ample supplies; a few warm days will bring on a big cut again. However, early orders are always advisable. Decoration day is essentially an occasion for cheap prices and advance quotations show little if any advance over current rates. But there are those who think the call for ordinary grade carnations may bring an advance on late orders.

It is noteworthy that where local peonies are often in full supply for Decoration day, this year we shall have to do business on the southern cut. Old Red is just coming from southern Illinois, while usually the main crop is pretty well cut by this date.

There is evident anxiety on the part of Texas and Alabama dealers to move the cape jasmines and unusually large quantities are already in the market. No matter what may turn up short for Decoration day, there will be plenty of capes, and of good quality.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club held its first Thursday evening meeting May 12 in the new hall, the attendance being rather light. The president appointed a committee on co-operation with the Horticultural Society as follows: J. C. Vaughan, C. L. Washburn, Leonard Kill, N. J. Wiator, John Poehlmann. The committee will have charge of the club's interests in the autumn flower show and will play an important part in making it the best show ever held in Chicago. The committee on revision of the by-laws reported lack of progress and was instructed by the chair to "get busy" before the next meeting, May 26. The new certificates ordered by the club were on exhibition and were pronounced a handsome piece of printing.

Some time ago the secretary of state at Springfield declared the club's charter forfeited for failure to file an affidavit, as required of corporations, showing that it was not a member of any trust or combination! This was not discovered for some time, but the reinstatement of the charter has now been secured by friends of the club without the reincorporation which was at first feared to be necessary.

The Fall Show.

Plans are well under way for the fall exhibition of the Horticultural Society of Chicago, the premium list for which is expected to be ready for distribution this week. As was announced in the REVIEW some time ago, the hall selected, or really three or four halls practically as one, is at the ninth floor of the Fine Arts building and Auditorium Hotel, the two buildings being connected on this floor. It seems an ideal location, even better than the Auditorium theater and at a fraction the expense, which will be a relief to those in charge of the financial end of the show. The visitors will be carried to the exhibition floor by the three large elevators in the Fine Arts building and the exit will be through the Auditorium Hotel elevators. There are two large freight elevators for the handling of exhibits. The date of the show has not yet been fixed, but it will be about the middle of November, a week after the presidential election.

Various Notes.

John Welter has leased the Jacob Phillip place at Rogers Park and will take possession about August 1. The place is now in carnations and there are 50,000 plants in the field for next season's planting, but the new proprietor expects to put the whole place in lettuce. Another Rogers Park carnation establishment recently changed hands by lease, Albert Lies taking the Paul Gaertner place. Mr. Gaertner will go into other business.

John Muir has a conservatory in course of erection at his new place at Forty-seventh and Grand boulevard. He expects to move about June 1.

The Gloede Floral Co., at Evanston, is sending the E. F. Winterson Co. some remarkable Flora Hill carnations. They have three-foot stems, but the length is not so unusual as the strength. The plants are said to be growing in lettuce soil.

John Muno has decided to reduce his rose planting and go more heavily into carnations for next season. He will therefore keep his roses going as late as possible instead of replanting very early, as has been his custom.

J. A. Budlong expects to have his new range ready next week for planting to Beauties.

Henry Payne will soon take up, divide and reset all the plants in his big house of adiantum, 4,500 in all, giving him a surplus of divided plants to market. He will also plant some of Kasting's Crow-eanium.

Ivory rose is not popular in this market and several growers will discard it, among them Sinner Bros., who will also reduce their planting of Beauties and give additional space to Brides and Maids, with a few Chatenay. Emil Kunz is now foreman at this place.

Coal on track for immediate delivery is down to a very reasonable figure; demurrage is piling up on it.

Baumann & Co., dealers in florists' supplies and artificial flowers, have removed to large quarters on the fourth floor at 76 and 78 Wabash avenue, over Bassett & Washburn and E. H. Hunt. They make very attractive goods in their line and are already planning their exhibit at the St. Louis S. A. F. convention.

O. P. Bassett has returned from a stay at West Baden.

C. W. McKellar has been getting in large quantities of good outdoor violets which have sold well at 10 cents a bunch.

C. M. Dickinson, manager of E. H. Hunt's, has been at St. Paul for a few days on business.

C. W. Northrup, at La Grange, is sending Kennicott Bros. Co. some unusually good outdoor tulips and Mr. Pieser says they are selling better than the indoor crops did. They have brought as high as 5 and 6 cents.

The Andrew McNally funeral last Saturday made business for the retailers, nearly all the leading stores being represented in the very large floral display.

E. C. Amling is getting some splendid Easter lilies from Matt Mann. Better stock is seldom seen, but they are slow sale at unprofitable prices for there is much 5-cent stock in the market.

Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Hauswirth announce the marriage of their daughter, Elsa Katherine, to Walter F. Hoyt on April 2.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is still getting in a very heavy cut.

Peter Reinberg has begun his rebuilding operations.

Visitors: J. A. Young, Aurora, Ill.; Martin Reukauf, of Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia; Robert Lundstrom, Oconomowoc, Wis.; A. E. Smith, Cleveland; G. F. Crabb, Grand Rapids.

Bowling.

The make-up of the convention team will be determined by a series of thirty games, five each, Tuesday at Mussey's alleys. All members of the Florists' Club are urged to participate, as only twenty games are required to qualify. To keep up the interest, the same scores will count in a scaled handicap, the winners of which will get some handsome trophies. George Stollery is handicapper and has given everybody a show. Following are the scores of the first series, rolled Tuesday night:

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The feature of the market was the sharp advance in Beauty roses at the close of last week. George Samtman had notified his customers that roses would be higher. It is probable that he counted on the crops going off about Wyndmoor, basing his conclusion on that fact only. The festivities attending the coaching parade last Saturday, the visit of our president's daughter—no, Roosevelt's not Westcott's—and other things brought good demand and higher prices sooner than anticipated. Sweet peas and valley have also been in very fair demand. This week the general tone of the market is rather dull, and on Wednesday Beauties were lower. There are more poor flowers about than heretofore. The street men are active, snapping up bargains at a great rate.

Wyncote.

Visiting Wyncote when the genial proprietor is away seems much like witnessing the play of Hamlet without the prince. While everything looked neat and orderly as always, one couldn't help feeling there was something missing when the genial smile and homely story of Joseph Heacock were not there. A hurried look through showed the great Beauties producing their last crop of specials before the annual house cleaning. A house of Liberty was not staked, but the plants kept off the walks by wires run along the edge of and above the table. The foliage on this variety was exceptionally luxuriant, promise of a good crop of bloom. A 250-foot house full of palms was a fine sight, the plants being tall and bushy, of good color and shape. The carnations were loaded with buds, looking fit for much work yet. A feature of this place is the side ventilation, freely used in mild weather during the day, both on carnations and roses. Much importance is attached to this form of ventilation, and to it may be due in part the general good health of the plants always noticeable. Thomas Cartledge once urged me to visit this place, saying it was the most economically heated place he knew. This is most true. With the houses compactly built on the side of a hill with southern exposure, the sun has full power, cold north winds are cut off and steam heat ascends easily to the house farthest from the boilers.

Various Notes.

Leo Niessen believes that there will be a good supply of peonies, as well as of choice greenhouse flowers, for Decoration day. There is no question that the demand in the city for that day is steadily increasing.

It is curious how much commotion the little word "the" can make.

H. Bayersdorfer will sail for Europe, Tuesday, May 24, on the good ship Kaiser Wilhelm, on his annual business trip in search of the best novelties and standard supplies that the market affords. Mrs. Bayersdorfer will accompany him.

Barnes & Lofland sold the property consisting of about six acres of ground, residence, 30,000 feet of glass, buildings, plants, etc., belonging to Edwin Lonsdale at public sale on Monday. The place was bought by John Burton for $12,600.

Dr. Henry Skinner delivered a lecture before the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society last Tuesday evening on "Insects and the Architecture of Their Homes."

Stephen B. Green, of M. Rice & Co., has lately returned from a successful business trip through the country. He found that Easter had proved generally satisfactory. The florists whom he met felt encouraged in spite of the heavy fuel expenses of the winter.

Robert Craig & Son have been awarded $17,000 damages against the city, due to the opening of Fiftieth street from Market to Chestnut street.

Though busily engaged with shipping orders, Edward Reid made time to name the best varieties of carnations from a wholesaler's point of view. White, Flora Hill; pink, at this season Mrs. E. A. Nelson; scarlet, in general cultivation G. H. Crane. He believes in Mrs. Lawson when cut tight, and in Enchantress. He thinks it very important that carnations should be picked before the sun is on the houses at this season.

Fred Foulds, son of Thomas Foulds, has taken the place of Albert Knapper at Ambler. The latter will remove to Germantown.

C. W. Cox is sending in the first Centaurea imperialis.

W. L. Edwards, of Norwood, is sending in fine candytuft.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. state that they have sold more wheat sheaves in the past month than in any previous year. They have been working overtime to keep pace with the demand for metal wreathes.

George F. Krueger, of Narberth, died on the morning of May 18 at Bryn Mawr hospital, as the result of a cut received on Tuesday.

Bowling.

THE REVIEW is indebted to W. R. Gibson for the score of the games played in Washington May 6. These games decided the Kramer cup contest in favor of Philadelphia, as described in this column last week. The cup has been on exhibition at Pennock Bros.' handsome store and has attracted much attention.

A Puzzle.

I have been asked to tell,
As one who ought to know,
Of those who sort and sell,
Where loves the "biz" to go.

'Tis very queer, I'm told,
Pennock, the Market, Reid,
And Leo Niessen, bold,
All claim best to succeed.

Smile meaningly, and so
Evince that there are others.

Four more commission men
Also move on apace;
One cannot rhyme them when Judging this thrilling race.

I've thought for many hours,
And now the victor know:
"He who sells the flowers
That bring the largest 'Dough.'"

MADISON, N. J.

Fall Exhibition Planned.

The Morris County Gardeners' and Florists' Society, at its meeting May 11, decided to hold its ninth annual show on October 27 and 28. The schedule is arranged and copies may be had from the secretary of the society, S. Redstone. While all the regular classes are well taken care of, there are some special prizes worthy of attention. Among them are prizes offered by Messrs. Henderson and Thorburn for vegetables, a prize for carnations from Messrs. Farquhar, of Boston, and other specials from Stumpp & Walter, Pierson-Sefton Co. and others. The date is set rather earlier than usual, owing to the fact that several of the largest exhibitors of chrysanthemums, notably Messrs. Herrington and Duckham, are already laying their plans to attend the National Chrysanthemum Society's show in Boston and it was deemed advisable not to conflict with the larger organization in the matter of dates.

Own-Root Roses Preferred.

At this meeting, after the regular order of business had been disposed of, the society listened to a talk on roses by J. Rusicka, who handled his subject in a very masterly way. In an organization composed so largely of rose growers, it goes without saying that considerable discussion ensued and probably the most interesting point brought out was the fact that the growers in this section are a unit in saying that own-root stock, when proper selection of the cuttings is made, is superior to the grafted stock. Grafted roses have been largely tried and careful comparisons made, and today the growers have all gone back to the own-root stock. It is not, however, to be inferred by this that own-root stock is preferable to grafted everywhere. It is well known that in certain sections the grafted stock shows a marked advantage, but apparently every grower has to work out his own salvation and decide which best suits his soil and climatic conditions.

Rose Growers Pessimistic.

I find in this section a very pessimistic view of the wholesale rose growing business. Just at present the output daily is enormous, the quality never better at this season, and the prices never worse. It is generally conceded that the man who has paid his coal bill and all other expenses and broken even is a lucky man this year. Prices have been wretched in New York all the winter and the weather being so unprecedentedly cold has simply meant that the small margin of profit has been wiped out. I hear no talk of building operations anywhere and the man who would enlarge in the face of the present conditions, as prevailing here, would be indeed an optimist. One by one the small, older establishments are falling by the wayside and many of the remaining places are for rent. Whether next winter will show any improvement in prices remains to be seen. One thing is certain, if it does not improve, many of the craft will find themselves in financial difficulties.

VISITOR.

PHILADELPHIA.—Charles Bond, an English gardener, has succeeded Alphonse Pericat as head orchid grower for Mrs. G. B. Wilson.

BUFFALO.

A Good Week.

From various causes, business was quite brisk last week and cooler weather shortened up supplies. Opening of stores, big and little, went on, so altogether it might be called a healthy week. There has been a great scarcity of pansies this spring and because there are scarcely any to be found the demand has seemed great. Winter killed, is the cry.

Club Doings.

The annual election of officers of the Buffalo Florists' Club, followed by a banquet, was to have occurred on Tuesday last. The banquet did occur all right, but the sticklers for adhering strictly to the constitution and by-laws would not hear of an election, as that must take place on the first meeting in March. So, much against the desires of several of the present officers, they will all hold over to the next legal date of election. The unwisdom of putting off our annual gathering till the busy month of May was clearly shown in the limited attendance; few of the rural members were in. Yet that good and faithful Charlie Guenther was on hand and so was Fred Lewis, from Lockport. If the gathering was small it was mighty select and the committee of arrangements had done its full duty. The decorations were fine and the menu was choice, tasty and in great variety. The orchestra played sweetly and their repertoire included many old favorites as well as the very latest, such as "I Am Wearing My Heart Away for You" and "Bedelia." John Pickleman and Louis H. Neubeck sang several comic songs in German, which were much enjoyed by those familiar with the Teutonic language, but as the writer has dropped German and taken up Corean he would have better appreciated these efforts in the Yiang Chiang lingo.

I am not going to inflict on you any long account of the exercises. Mr. Kasting, as chairman of the banquet committee, rapped for order and then installed the president, W. S., as toastmaster. Now we know several young men and perhaps old ones, too, who absent themselves from these pleasant affairs just because they are afraid they are going to be called upon for "a few remarks." So the toastmaster announced that he would only call on three or four for speeches and the rest would have to be volunteers, with a song, a story or anything that they liked to offer, as long as it was fitting the occasion and becoming the dignity of a florist. Long before the set speeches were concluded James Buxton contributed a solo, instrumental, called the hand and leg banjo. He said he saw it on the Columbian Midway. Mr. Kasting, D. B. Long, Charlie Keitsch and Louis Neubeck all made good, sensible talks and then there were very good volunteers. G. Stafflinger, who has lately been appointed superintendent of Holy Cross cemetery, surprised us with his eloquence and up-to-date ideas of cemetery management. His talk was lively, even if it was rather a dead subject. It was a most enjoyable evening and there is little excuse for several vacant chairs. It is selfish and wrong not to support the local club and a new baby or new business is no excuse for your absence on this one night when all should meet. One word more. Let no visiting florist come to town and fail to see the building, the conveniences and spacious halls and rooms in W. F. Kasting's new quarters, and there is where the festivities were held.

A Visit to Fredonia.

The writer paid a short visit to the pretty village of Fredonia one day last week and if it had not rained continuously he might have called on several more florists than he did. It is vineyards every way you look, not attractive at this time of year, yet beautiful and rich when Concord's purple clusters load down the vines in October. I remember some fourteen years ago quoting figures that were given me which were to the effect that this famous grape belt extending from Silver Creek, N. Y., to Harbor Creek, Pa., shipped in one season 2,900 car loads of grapes. Those figures would look small now. Last fall I believe there were more than 9,000 car loads. Fredonia has also large canning factories and they have brought a numerous foreign population and as foreigners have to eat and wear clothes it has stimulated other lines of business, including the doctors', undertakers' and florists'.

We called on Edward Button, on West street, who last year built two houses, each 20x100. They are most substantially built. Carnations mostly occupied the benches till Easter and now they are largely filled with a fine lot of geraniums and a good assortment of other bedding plants. Mr. Button is sufficiently encouraged that he will shortly begin the erection of another 125-foot house and other improvements.

A walk through the pretty cemetery soon found us at the houses of James Larder, who, besides his florist business, is the superintendent of the cemetery. He has added several houses since I last visited him. It's strange to see old Lizzie McGowan carnation grown, and yet there it was with loads of flowers. Mr. Larder says Lizzie must now go. Genevieve Lord, Flora Hill, The Marquis and, of course, the indispensable Lawson were the principal benches. Fredonia is not only blessed with a mild climate, escaping the late spring as well as early fall frosts, but also with a splendid loam soil on gravelly subsoil and the carnations and even the geraniums show the quality of their soil. Mr. Larder has 10,000 zonale geraniums in 4-inch pots in very fine order and he knows the varieties to grow, which were S. A. Nutt, John Doyle, a splendid bedding scarlet, F. Perkins, Gloire de France, Jean Viaud, La Favorite, the double white, and the splendid old Beauty Poitevine. The raising of vegetable plants is quite an item with all the Fredonia florists and 100,000 tomato plants were being handled at this place.

Now if it had not rained I might have had a longer story to tell you. So in conclusion I want to say that I noticed with regret the ravages of the past winter. Dozens of fine Irish junipers ruined and the English ivy killed, and these are only trifles of what the losses are in less favored localities. Landscape architects sit in their cozy offices and draw pretty pictures and when these plans are executed they include English ivy and holly and tree box and other plants and shrubs that have as much chance of living with us, through such a winter as the last, as a turned loose canary bird in northern Siberia. Strange to say, the rhododendron, a complete failure in Buffalo, grows and flourishes in favored Fredonia. Yet they don't seem to know it, for you see but a few of this most gorgeous of all hardy flowering shrubs where it thrives. W. S.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

This market is receiving great numbers of all kinds of flowers. Roses and carnations of very good quality are accumulating in large quantities and can be bought at one's own figure. Lilies, which have been so plentiful since Easter, are now good sale. Callas are in oversupply. There are plenty of very fine sweet peas for everyone. Pansies are also very plentiful. Violets are now a thing of the past. The demand for Beauties is limited. Quantities of outdoor flowers are arriving.

Various Notes.

Last Sunday we experienced some very cold weather; the temperature went down to 41 degrees. A light hailstorm passed over this section but did no damage.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. is receiving large quantities of new ferns.

Good prospects for June are in sight, many weddings, and quite a number of good-sized orders are placed for decorations. Randolph & McClements have several very large wedding decorations for next month.

John Baldinger, of T. M. Ulam & Co., is serving as a juror in the United States court.

The sale of bedding stock is very slow, as outdoor planting is still limited, due to the cold and backward spring.

Carnations in this section are all in the field, and the long needed rain came last Saturday and Sunday.

C. T. Siebert has a fine lot of geraniums and miscellaneous bedding stock which he grows exclusively for his retail trade.

Miss Carrie Jordon, saleslady for John Foss, Pittsburg Market, is seriously ill with typhoid fever.

Ernest Zieger, who has been confined to his home, is about again.

On Friday, May 13, Walter S., son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Gass, died at his parents' residence, Gass avenue, Allegheny. Mr. Gass was in his twenty-second year. The craft extend their sympathy to the bereaved family.

Christ Nichter, who is with Patrick Maier, Millvale, has the sympathy of all in the loss of his wife last Wednesday. Hoo-Hoo.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business last week reminds one very much of a nightmare. It was just about as bad as one can imagine it. Flowers of all kinds were coming by the wagon load, and the demand was so small that after all orders had been filled you could not notice where they had been taken from. As a consequence prices fell till they reached bed rock and then it became virtually impossible to move the surplus, even by giving it away. The demand had about as much life as it has in mid-summer and at times even less. Friday and Saturday trade took a spurt and the general cloudy atmosphere was gradually dispelled, until by Sunday the market had been pretty well cleared out and prices were again in a fairly healthy state. The May music festival, several large receptions and also a great number of funeral orders, helped to bring order out of the general depression.

Beauties had the call and sold out fast. Sweet peas also went well. Lilies, though selling at very low prices, were cleared out. Carnations came by the thousands, and buyers got them at their own figures. Roses were mostly of very poor quality, and sold correspondingly low. Lily of the valley sold well and there was not enough for all orders. Outdoor flowers are fine this year and they helped to hold the price of greenhouse flowers down. Peonies are growing fast and it looks as if they will be over before Decoration day.

Various Notes.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Society failed to come off, owing to there not being a quorum present.

Jas. Allan has been confined to his bed but is now better.

Wm. Mann has severed his connection with the Ohio Cut Flower Co.

W. A. Chalfant, of Springfield, Mo., was a visitor. C. J. OHMER.

WASHINGTON.

The condition of the cut flower market is fair for this season of the year, but stock is plentiful and prices moderate. Gude Bros. seem to have no end to the supply of Beauties, and their stock is certainly fine, specials bringing from $3 to $8, while ordinary grades realize from $2 to $5, retail. Brides, Bridesmaids and Kaiserin are somewhat smaller, and only moderate prices prevail. Carnations are still plentiful, but generally of very good quality. Bedding stock is offered in large quantities and finds ready sale at good prices.

The Washington Florists' Club held its first meeting on the night of May 4, about fifty members being present. From the tone of the meeting it was evident that Washington certainly needs a Florists' Club. Wm. F. Gude was elected president, F. H. Kramer vice-president, Peter Bissett secretary and Wm. H. Ernest treasurer. A committee was appointed to wait on the commissioners to inquire further in regard to the payment of licenses by the florists of the city. A committee was also appointed to meet the delegations of Baltimore and Philadelphia florists who paid us a visit May 6.

On that evening, after giving the visitors a car ride to the Congressional Library, all adjourned to the Rathskella for lunch. After lunch one of the largest automobiles was pressed into service for a sight-seeing tour of the city, after which came the bowling contest for the Kramer cup, which was bowled on the Rathskella alleys in the presence of a large number of the craft. The score was: Philadelphia, 2,546; Washington, 2,453; Baltimore, 2,144.

After the contest all gathered about the banquet board at Reuter's Hotel and made merry until a late hour. Wm. F. Gude acted as toastmaster and Mr. Kramer, of the local team, presented the cup to the winning bowlers. The center of the table was adorned with a huge vase of Beauties contributed by Mr. Gude. H. B. L.

BOOTHWYN, PA.—Williams Bros. have planted out 30,000 carnation plants and the stock is in good shape.

IT IS OUR AIM TO MAKE OUR PLACE at all times the most reliable source of supply in Chicago. We have large resources at all seasons. For DECORATION DAY we shall be particularly well equipped, and shall be able to take care of all comers. Among other items we shall have:

PEONIES The favorite Flower for Decoration Day. Big show for little money. We expect to have enough for all. White, pink, red; best sorts.

TEA ROSES Our growers are sending in heavy cuts. Stock averaging up with the best now in market. Brides fine; Maids of good color.

CARNATIONS All the leading varieties in large supply. Fine stems, good flowers, colors holding well. A very good grade of goods at prices quoted.

VALLEY, PEAS Choice Valley all the year 'round. Large supplies of Choice Sweet Peas.

GREEN GOODS This is one of our specialties. Practically inexhaustible supplies of ASPARAGUS, long, heavy strings. SMILAX and SPRENGER. Let us have your orders.

CAPE JASMINES Alabama Grandiflora stock, much larger flowers and longer stem than the ordinary variety. Crop unusually good this year.

FERNS We still have a small quantity of the true Berkshire stock in cold storage and coming out in fine shape; 1000, $4.50; 100, 50c. "Snow Birds," $3.00 per 1000, 35c per 100.

We can at all times supply everything which is to be had in the Chicago market. We keep enlarging our facilities just a step ahead of the increase in our business, and are at all times ready to meet new demands upon us. Write, telegraph or, better yet, telephone.

BOSTON.The Market.

The market is in a very depressed state, there being a heavy glut of almost everything. Some flowers are carried home again and others disposed of at absurdly low prices. There is no prospect of betterment before Decoration day, when a heavy trade will be done.

Best quality Beauty roses bring $15 with difficulty; first-class stock brings $10. Carnations are getting smaller, although some very fine stock continues to come in. Few fancies exceed $2, while ordinary grades have gone as low as 25 cents per 100. Gladioli are quite plentiful and outdoor lily of the valley of fine quality has appeared. Other outdoor stock includes Iris Germanica, Narcissus poeticus in quantity, late flowering tulips and lilac. Sweet peas are lower, best blooms being sold at 50 cents. Quite a number of orchids are seen in the better class of stores, Cattleya Mossiae, C. Mendelli and C. Skinneri, Lælia purpurata and Dendrobium thyrsiflorum.

Decoration day prospects are one of the prime topics just now. A first-class trade is anticipated. There will be probably more outdoor stock than usually available, but a few hot days will change all this. An immense quantity of outdoor flowers are usually available, such as lilacs, snowballs, German iris, oriental poppies, pyrethrums, Pæonia officinalis, Narcissus poeticus, late tulips, lily of the valley, etc. Some of these are already in bloom, including the first four, and unless the weather continues fairly cool for the next ten days, they will not be available. An early season is the best for sale of greenhouse stock.

Various Notes.

At present all orchards and gardens are a glorious picture, with their wealth of fruit blossoms. Apples, pears, plums and cherries are sheets of bloom. Peaches are nearly all killed outright, the exceptions being those growing at high elevations. Quite a number of the Japanese plums are also badly killed back. As trees and shrubs come into leaf the full extent of the damage sustained from the severe winter becomes more apparent.

But for the heavy snow protection many shrubs would have been killed outright. Viburnum plicatum and V. tomentosum are cut down to the snow line. Halesias and exochordas have suffered similarly. Deutzia crenata for the first time in many years is cut to the ground. Ligustrum vulgaris is the only privet unscathed. L. ibota has suffered badly in some places. L. ovalifolium has proved its worthlessness in this latitude and will be generally discarded. The fine Newport hedges mentioned by Mr. Scott in your last issue are of California privet and have suffered badly the last two winters. The syringa family with the loniceras have again proved themselves the most reliable of our shrubs.

Climbers have suffered severely. Wistarias have all flower buds and many growth buds killed. Honeysuckles are cut to the snow line. English ivy, even where well protected, is badly killed.

Ampelopsis Veitchii has suffered more than ever before. Euonymus radicans has wintered finely. Clematis paniculata, which usually kills back considerably, is cut to the ground, but is coming up vigorously as usual. Aristolochias, bignonias, akebias and other climbers are all right.

The new houses projected by N. F. McCarthy & Co., at Melrose, Mass., promise to be among the largest of their kind in the country. The dimensions of 60 x 900 will no doubt cause some other progressive florist to erect a 1,000-foot house to hold the record. The Melrose establishment is devoted to rose culture.

Bedding plants in large quantities are being disposed of at the various stores and auction rooms. Geraniums, cannas, dahlias, verbenas, coleus and fuchsias seem to be favorites.

best about May 24. Practically every variety of lilac procurable, including all the latest European novelties, are to be seen here. In addition to the lilacs a grand collection of pyrus and prunus are also in flower. The well known Prunus Pissardi is killed in many parts of Massachusetts.

Miss M. S. Ames, of North Easton, has presented a number of large palms to the Harvard Botanic Gardens. Three large ones have also been forwarded to the New York Botanic Gardens at Bronx Park, including a fine specimen of Livistona Hoogendorffii, twenty feet in diameter.

The annual rhododendron show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society scheduled for June 4 and 5, will probably have to be postponed a week, owing to the lateness of the season. The show of rhododendrons is likely to be a small one, as many plants are killed and practically all flower buds, except where heavily protected. Many azaleas are also killed and flower buds generally destroyed. Classes 97, 98 and 99 in the schedule of the society were by an error not properly classified. They are for hardy azaleas.

Henry J. Elwes, the noted English hardy plant and bulb authority, has been visiting friends in Boston.

Carnation men have had ideal weather for transferring their stock to the fields. Last May we had no rain, but at present we are having good rains, which insures a good start to all newly planted carnations.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; First Vice-Pres., J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, O.; Sec'y and Treas., O. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. The 22d annual meeting will be held at St. Louis, Mo., June, 1904.

MAIL addressed to the American Mushroom Co., St. Louis, has been forwarded to Texarkana, where the postmaster returned it to sender marked "Fraudulent."

THE sweet corn and cucumber situation is unchanged. A considerable acreage of each has been planted, but no sign of sprouting so far. It is likely that when re-seeding time comes a boom will be on and what little seed is left will bring high figures.

THE past week at Chicago has been such as to prolong the seeding for onion sets. It was hoped that the end of last week would see all the seeding done, but on low ground, where it was expected that a few warm days would permit seeding, work had to be stopped and it may take a week yet to finish up.

TRADE generally is quite unsatisfactory; nothing has been normal during the whole season so far. The growing crops are much retarded by unseasonable weather and at all points, owing to this, the usual second and third plantings have not been made. The season is so far advanced now that a clear loss of considerable business may be charged up against the weather.

THE KENTUCKY SEED TRADE.

The following review of the season is from Wood, Stubbs & Co., Louisville, Ky., dated May 7:

The season's trade on grass and field seeds in this market on the whole has been very large, though prices have been in many instances cut very close and comparative little profits have been made by the regular dealer. Anticipated advances in Orchard, Red Top, Blue grass and Timothy did not materialize and dealers who purchased stocks of Orchard grass in the fall with anticipation of getting higher prices in the spring were disappointed.

This is due in a large measure to a considerable quantity of grass seed being left in farmers' hands. Many who were offered as much as $1.45 and $1.50 per bushel in the fall, just after threshing time, stored their seed, paid charges and afterwards in the spring sold their seed for a great deal less money.

Blue grass has remained about stationary with little profit to anybody, where straight Kentucky has been sold. Red Top also has remained about stationary throughout the entire season, and cleaners of this seed, owing to the small export demand, found prices did not advance as they anticipated.

The fact of the wet spring generally prevailing in all parts of the country no doubt kept down the prices of grass seeds and reduced the quantity which would have been sold, so all the dealers here have had increased volume of business. This is, however, the natural result, because Louisville is fast becoming one of the most important centers for grass seed trade and can offer to better advantage than nearly any other point on general lines.

WRITE US

The onion set situation was more or less of a surprise to everybody and few dealers reaped any special profit on account of the market advancing in price. We, ourselves, felt a month before the advance came that there was bound to be a heavy demand and knew there were light stocks. We were somewhat prepared for a good advance, but did not anticipate it would be anything like as great as actually occurred.

This year the acreage will be slightly enlarged, though the season has not been particularly favorable for getting a good stand, and there has been a good deal of complaint from this cause. We expect, however a good fair crop, and growers will naturally expect better prices in the fall than they have been getting for the last two or three years.

Indications for the new crop Kentucky Blue and Orchard grass are not particularly favorable, though it is early yet to determine about the latter.

The garden seed trade has been very satisfactory, on the whole, with us.

WITH THE CANNERS.

The season is still backward in all the canning districts and there is danger that it may have an effect on peas. The crop is ten days to two weeks behind hand. This means, of course, a shorter period for germination and development before the blistering heat of summer causes the crop to ripen almost at once, hardening the peas in the pods before they can be gotten into the cans. In Indiana the crop is all in, but the acreage is less than for 1903. In Wisconsin planting is progressing, about ten days late. The acreage is larger than last year, and in 1903 the yield was light. In New York seeding is late, one grower reporting six weeks behind 1903. The output will not be increased. In Delaware pea seed was all in a month or so ago, although at that the season was a week or ten days late. The acreage is considerably smaller than in 1903. California will have a good-sized pack this year.

The situation as to corn acreage and the germinating power of the seed isn't to the liking of canners as a rule. Seed corn varies considerably in vitality, and acreage is in many sections harder to contract than ever before. Letters received from packers show that on the whole there has been a great deal of poor seed on the market. In New York state especially the canners find it difficult to induce farmers to grow sweet corn. Two successive bad seasons have discouraged the farmers in that section to such an extent that they are very reluctant to plant any more corn for canning purposes. We have just heard the opinion expressed by one who should be well informed that this year's corn acreage in New York state may be as much as 25 per cent smaller than in 1903. NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; Vice-Pres., F. A. Weber, St. Louis; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The twenty-eighth annual convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., June, 1904.

VISITED ST. LOUIS.—Mr. and Mrs. Wm. A. Peterson, Chicago.

J. C. MOORE, nurseryman, of Mountain City, Mo., died May 6, aged 51 years.

THE story of the origin of the Logan berry on page 1381 will be of interest to nurserymen.

THE usual rate of a fare and one-third on the certificate plan has been made for the Nurserymen's convention.

N. W. HALE, president of the American Association of Nurserymen, is reported quite ill and his presence at the Atlanta convention doubtful.

At a recent meeting of the Pacific Coast Nurserymen's Association it was voted to invite the American Association to hold its meeting in 1905 at Portland, Ore.

HENRI VAN DER BOM, of the firm of H. W. Van der Bom & Co., nurserymen, Oudenbosch, Holland, has arrived at New York for an extensive trip through the United States.

THE Storrs & Harrison Co. has had a very good business this spring, notwithstanding the unfavorable conditions. It is stated that 170 cars of stock were shipped between April 23 and May 11, with considerable more still to go out.

OWATONNA, MINN.—The Clinton Falls Nursery Co., of this city, is making plans to largely extend its business. Having purchased the Lord greenhouses for removal to their grounds, they will erect two entirely new houses, each 29x180, material for one of which has been already ordered. A space 100x200 in front of the greenhouses will be a display ground for hardy stock of all kinds.

THE W. & T. Smith Co., Geneva, N. Y., writes: "We have had an average season for our work, although spring opened later than usual. On account of winter closing in so early we did not get the usual amount of fall work done, and on that account have been more than usually rushed. Spring sales have been fully up to the average of the last two years and the demand for many items has been much in excess of the supply."

THE recently incorporated Aurora Nursery Co., Aurora, Ill., J. A. Young, manager, is in the market for considerable quantities of shrubbery and hybrid perpetual roses, Crimson Rambler, etc., also herbaceous perennials, phlox, peonies, cannas, etc. They already have a nice trade and their own plantings will approximate thirty acres. They will this season erect greenhouses for propagating, etc., and also for plants and cut flowers. They propose to do a general business, both wholesale and retail.

For a few years these close plantations may serve the purpose of a nursery, and surplus plants may, if needed, be removed to other locations; but it is only a very short time, comparatively, until the ax must be used, and that freely. If specimen plants are required this thinning must be undertaken before there is an actual contact between the plants to give the necessary amount of light and air.

While the tools needed will be simply the ax and the grub, yet there are few operations which require more careful study and pre-arrangement. In the case of trees so many considerations enter into the problem, that haste is impossible, and one should give ample time to its solution. Those to be destroyed as well as those to be saved should be viewed from many positions and at many times.

It takes a lot of nerve to cut away vigorous trees, but it must be done. This lack of nerve is undoubtedly responsible for the many examples of crowded, diseased and mis-shapen plantations to be seen in public as well as private grounds. —JOHN F. COWELL in Bulletin of the New England Association of Park Superintendents.

I go to the REVIEW, for I have learned by experience that it is the place to go for help in time of need; it gives help, sympathy, comfort and consolation; it finds buyers and sellers and brings them together; it keeps us posted in all lines belonging to the craft, and so I like it.

New York Flower Market.
 The first and most desirable floor of the Coogan Building will shortly be fitted up as a flower market. The second floor of this building is occupied by the New York Cut Flower Co., and the third floor is occupied by the Cut Flower Exchange. Concentration of the wholesale portion of any business whatsoever is absolutely necessary.
 Here is an excellent chance for Commission Men, Wholesale Florists and Growers to get together under one roof.
 The location is the best in the city for the flower business and the rent is reasonable. For further particulars address
NEW YORK FLOWER MARKET, Coogan Bldg., 55 and 57 W. 26th St., New York.

CLEVELAND.

Joseph Tilson, 56 years of age, a well-known florist, succumbed to an attack of typhoid fever May 11, after an illness of about seven weeks. Mr. Tilson was born in England, and came to this country when he was 17 years old. His first home was at Shelby, O., but later he removed to Cleveland, and had lived here twenty-two years. For twenty years he was in the employ of Mrs. H. B. Herbert, of No. 885 Euclid avenue. He is survived by a widow and five children.

DECATUR, IND.—The funeral of Judge David Studabaker made a very large call for funeral flowers, the display being one of the most extensive ever seen in this part of the state.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—The Metropolitan Material Co. wishes it understood that they have no connection with the Manhattan Supply Co. They have recently bought three lots adjoining their premises and will build on them shortly.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—Things have been quiet here of late and the cold weather has retarded planting out, so that very little has as yet been done in that line. There has been a large surplus of cut stock and, while quotations on the better grades have changed but little, still much low grade stuff has been jobbed off pretty cheap locally.

BALTIMORE, MD.—The Maryland Steel Co., at Sparrows Point, maintains a greenhouse in charge of Herman Henning and annually distributes free to residents many thousands of bedding plants to encourage the improvement of the settlement.

ONEIDA, N. Y.—The other night a passerby saw smoke issuing from Kraft's greenhouse on Cedar street, and he accordingly turned in an alarm of fire. When the firemen responded they found that the proprietor was trying to exterminate insects by burning a pan of tobacco dust.

COLUMBUS, O.—Mrs. Rose Underwood, widow of the late John Underwood, has been appointed by the probate court as administratrix of the estate. She has been appointed to absolute control of the floral business of the late deceased, which business she assumes in the old name of Underwood Bros., florists.

THE BOSTON FERN.

Once more the Boston fern has demonstrated that it is the most popular plant grown in this country. For several seasons the cry has gone up that the production of Bostons had been overdone and that the market would not consume the vast quantities of plants prepared for it. But each spring has seen stocks cleaned out and the demand still unsatisfied. This is the case again this season, even though last fall saw larger stocks prepared than ever before. All the large growers have done a greater business than ever, and hundreds of smaller producers have contributed their share towards the stock. But now many sizes are in short supply and wherever there are good plants there is a market waiting for them if their existence be but made known.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The Rhode Island Horticultural Society has issued the schedule of premiums for its June and September exhibitions. The June show is for strawberries, but there are classes for hardy flowers and a liberal list for garden roses. For the September show there is a long list of prizes for greenhouse plants, for flowers cut outdoors and also for carnations. There are also a number of classes for dahlias, a number of which are open only to exhibitors from other states. This is also the fruit show.

PACIFIC COAST.

THE Logan berry is a native of California, the story of its origin being told on page 1381.

THE note on cinerarias and verbenas on page 1422 properly belongs under the head of "Pacific Coast," as it refers to conditions in California.

THE convention city of 1905 will be Portland, Ore., where the Lewis and Clark Exposition will be in progress. Invitations will be extended to practically all the conventions of 1904, to hold their next year's meeting on the Pacific coast.

THE Retail Florists' Association having failed in its effort to dispose of the street salesmen, F. P. Shibley has taken individual action in the form of a petition for a permanent injunction against the Board of Supervisors, who issue the peddlers' permits.

DIFFICULTIES WITH PACKING.

Pacific coast nurserymen import vast quantities of hardy evergreen and deciduous stock from France and other European countries and each season finds more and more being planted. A great deal more would be used by our dealers if there was any guarantee that the stock would reach us in such a condition that there would be any likelihood of its growing. It seems to be impossible to impress the fact on French nurserymen that goods destined for California should have any more packing around the roots than those shipped to New York or somewhere in that vicinity. I have for years made special mention in my letters accompanying orders to Europe about this matter and it is only occasionally that the boxes are opened here and found in good order. The shortest possible time that we can receive goods by freight is thirty days, and it is considered a choice bit of luck if they arrive in thirty-five; it is usually about forty, so that dealers can figure on having the goods boxed up in the neighborhood of six weeks. It is necessary for the boxes to be well lined to insure against cold weather sure to be encountered en route. It is possible to receive boxes from New York by way of steamer to Galveston, but my experience with stock received that way has been that it invariably gets too close to the ship's boilers and I usually use the young plants for firewood as soon as I have time to unpack them.

Our American nurserymen, I must confess, especially those who make a specialty of shipping to Pacific coast points, can usually be relied upon to pack properly, but the French, Dutch and Belgian growers have much to learn before they arrive at anywhere near perfection in packing. As a sample let me cite the case of the last two boxes I received from one of the largest nurseries in France. Among the items I unpacked were 500 Lawson cypress, nice hardy plants three years old. These were crowded in the bottom of the boxes without a particle of packing around the roots. On top of them were 500 Cryptomeria Japonica, also without any packing around the roots. There were not over half a dozen live plants in the lot where there should have been no trouble whatever. In another box 1,000 English hollies were piled in a heap without any moss and the foliage had been moistened considerably because it was all rotted off. They should have been tied in bunches of 100 each, the roots well wrapped with moss and cleated in the boxes, so that there was a circulation of air between the bundles, to prevent damping off of the foliage. There is never quite so much trouble to revive stock that gets dry, providing the roots are mossed, as when the conifers, evergreens and young seedlings are piled in heaps in the boxes and from the natural moisture of the leaves get heated en route, so that when unpacked they are usually worthless.

The only stock that we receive here from foreign ports that is always properly packed is that from Japan. The Japanese nurserymen are very particular in this regard, as they cleat all the stock in the boxes, pack plenty of moss around the balls of earth or bare roots, and in addition cut square holes in the boxes for ventilation, which are covered inside with fine mesh wire screening to prevent the rats from getting in the boxes.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

I am inclined to think we are going to have a superabundance of almost all classes of stock for the next few months, and the retailers will have the privilege of fixing prices to suit themselves. The large increase of the quantity of glass that is now coming into bearing would be enough in itself to make a big difference with the amount marketed, to say nothing of the extra acres that have been planted in hardy stocks. I fear that the low prices will affect principally the growers who handle the commoner grades of stock, whether in roses, carnations or mixed flowers. The public is getting more and more particular all the time and only such growers as make a specialty and can be depended on to produce a first-class article can hope to get any return for their summer crops.

Good roses seem to be as much in demand as ever and there is not, although we are at the height of the season, any surplus of fancy stock. The best Beauties are bringing $2 per dozen and they are as eagerly bought up as though we were in the middle of winter. Fancy Brides and Maids are netting the grower $1 per dozen and Kaiserin, Testout and Liberty from 75 cents to $1. But I saw a Japanese grower dump in one of our largest retail stores today fifty dozen mixed Brides and Maids for $2 and then offer twenty dozen Crocker carnations for a dollar. These are very low prices, but the quality of the stock was only fair and the grower doubtless considered he was very fortunate in being able to sell it at all. The sweet-pea growers have had splendid prices for their stock for the past month, and it is only within the present week that rates have fallen below $1.50 per dozen bunches. It has been a very peculiar season for sweet peas. In ordinary years it was no trick to have sweet peas in market early in March, but this season it was only on high or exceptionally well drained land that the peas survived the winter. The Chinese have the bulk of this business. Decoration day will soon be here and there will be an abundance of outdoor stock of all kinds to offer. Some of our retailers have a good shipping trade to interior towns and any sort of hardy stock can be utilized.

Various Notes.

Serveau Bros. are having a big demand for bedding stock this month. They handle a good quantity of general nursery stock.

Joseph Furtado, head gardener for the Realty Syndicate, of Oakland, is out of the hospital, where he was confined for several weeks with a severe case of blood poisoning.

Thos. Hooper, for many years foreman for Sievers & Boland, has taken charge of the greenhouses of the late Geo. Karmann, at Elmhurst.

F. M. Frank has given up his San Pueblo avenue store in Oakland and purchased the flower stand at the narrow gauge depot.

J. E. Bamber, of Truckee, Cal., who handles considerable flowers in his neighborhood, is in town.

A Prosperous Florist is Never Idle

A glimpse into my houses will prove this; even enemies must admit that an unusual amount of work has been done to fill an establishment of so many houses which were emptied at Easter, with such an enormous stock of 150 000 choice bedding plants, an increase of 50 000 from last year, ready now for immediate shipment. Secure bargains for now and Decoration Day.

Geraniums—Le Pilot (double scarlet), Mme. Thibaut (double pink), La Favorite (double white), S. A. Nutt (double crimson), out of 4-inch pots, at $7.00 per 100.

Ageratums—(Blue), 4-inch pots, $6.00 per 100; 3-inch pots, $5.00 per 100.

Scarlet Sage—Best varieties only, 4-inch pots, $7.00 per 100; 3-inch pots, $5.00 per 100.

Begonia—Vernon and Erfordii, 4-inch pots, $7.00 per 100.

Heliotropes—(Blue), 4 inch pots $6.00 per 100.

Hermosa and Hybrid Roses—4-inch pots, $10.00 per 100.

Hardy or English Ivies—4-inch pots, $10.00 per 100; 3-inch, $7.00 per 100; 2½-inch, $5.00 per 100.

Periwinkle—(Vinea Variegata), very strong, 4 inch pots, $8.00 per 100.

Cobaea Scandens—4-inch, strong, $6.00 per 100.

Begonia—Tuberous rooted, 5½-inch pots, in bloom and bud, $2.50 per doz.

Pres. Carnot and other mixed varieties, very strong, 5½-inch pots, $2.00 per doz.

Fuchsias—5 inch pots, $1.50 per doz.

Daisies—Yellow and White, 5-inch pots, $2.00 per doz.

Honeysuckle—6-inch pots, $2.00 per doz.

Dracaena Indivisa and Latanias—6-7-inch pots, 50c each.

Hydrangea Otaksa—For out-door planting, 6-inch pots $3.00 per doz.

Small plants, out of 2½-inch pots, $3.00 per doz.: Petunia (California Giant) and Inimitable Dwarf, Phlox Drummondii Gigantum, Nasturtium (Empress of India), 3-inch pots: Verbeneas, Sweet Alyssum (Little Gem), Lobelias, Cupheas, Tradescantia, Pyrethrum (Golden Feather), Alternantheras (red and yellow), Dusty Miller, Parlor Ivy and Coleus Verschaffeltii, Golden Bedder and Firebrand.

Don't forget that I am the Moonvine grower of the land; only A. W. Smith's Hybrid Moonvines (Ipomaea Noctiflora) is exclusively the one I grow, and is the only true Moonvine in America, as Mr. Smith has the world-wide reputation of growing the best Moonvine seed. Please bear in mind that this is no Morning Glory, like so many sell for Moonvines, but the pure, white, waxy Moonflowers, as large as saucers, 3-inch pots, $7.00 per 100; 4-inch $10.00 per 100, nicely staked up. Watch "ad." for Araucarias, Palms and Ficus in about three weeks. Please send cash with orders. All goods travel at purchaser's risk. My best thanks to my customers for their liberal patronage at Easter.

NEW PINK CHRYSANTHEMUM

AMERICAN BEAUTY—Certificate C.S.A.

Originated in this country three years ago. It has shown to possess all the qualities required of a first-class commercial Chrysanthemum. Clean, healthy growth, 3½ to 4 feet high, good stem and foliage, every flower coming good under ordinary culture. Form of flower ideal, being closely incurved and high built. Keeping and shipping qualities excellent: color a beautiful dark pink, uniform in every flower. Flowering time November 20th and later. Price 50c each, $5.00 per dozen, $30.00 per hundred. For other varieties ask for list. Cash with order.

Princess of Wales

THE MOST VALUABLE VIOLET TO GROW.

WHILE DOUBLE VIOLETS have been "dumped" in the leading cities, good singles have been bringing good returns to the grower. The popularity of this Violet is astonishing. I have sold in the city of Boston this winter 1 800,000 blooms without having to make any sacrifice. You can do the same if you have good stock. You cannot afford to have poor stock. I have simply the best stock in the country. I will send out in May strong, transplanted stock for which I am now booking orders at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000; 500 at 1000 rate.

To-Bak-Ine Fumigating Powder

KILLS all kinds of APHIDES.

50 lbs., $1.50; 100 lbs., $3.00

DIRECTIONS FOR A HOUSE 100 X 24 FEET.

Use 4 to 5 pounds of TO-BAK-INE FUMIGATING POWDER, equally divided into 4 or 5 portions, and placed on fine wire cloth or tin pie plates. Pour a little kerosene around on thin edge of piles and then light; it will burn slowly without blazing. Note the fumes of nicotine. Best to fumigate in moist atmosphere. Note—An ordinary 6-inch pot will hold, heaping full, about a pound of TO-BAK-INE POWDER.

CINERARIAS AND VERBENAS.

One of the brightest and most satisfactory plants that can be used to beautify a shady, moist place is the cineraria. With us these plants are perennials and if the situation is suitable for them they will come up from the root indefinitely. As they seed themselves it requires no particular care to have them by thousands. It is a surprise to me that some of our growers do not cultivate the cineraria for seed. The plants make magnificent crowns of the most gorgeous flowers and produce big plump seeds in enormous quantities. We cannot import such large, well filled seed from Europe and it seems to me that there must be a great deal of money that is allowed to go to waste, judging by the high prices asked for this popular flower in other places and with us it is considered little better than a wild flower. The cineraria succeeds splendidly in any shady situation either in complete shade under trees, where there are not too many roots near the surface, or in partial shade of buildings or fences. They seem to like a loose, rich soil and plenty of water; when they are supplied they grow as high as four feet, with hundreds of big, shiny blossoms and are never out of bloom from one season to another.

Verbenas are also a perennial article with us and as they stand considerable cold weather there is no particular danger from frosts. They do not, however, do anything more than hold their own during our severe wet weather and such a season as we have just had on account of the superabundance of water seems to be more than they can stand. As far as I have seen, we are not troubled with rust or smut on our plants and here, again, is where the seed grower should turn his attention. Our verbenas flower freely ten months in the year and a single plant will cover a quantity of space with a wealth of showy flowers.

DILLON GREENHOUSE MFG. COMPANY,

BLOOMSBURG, PA.

BOILER AND PIPING.

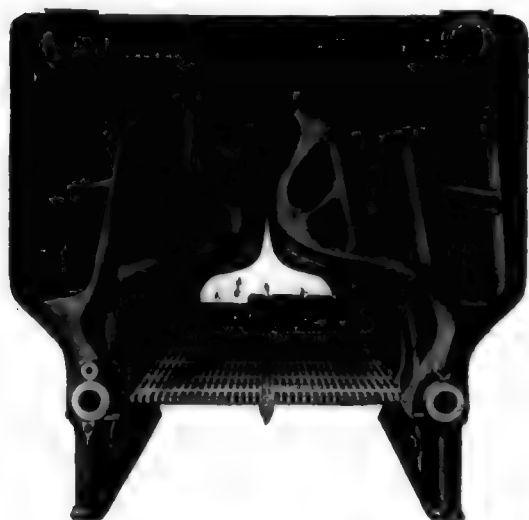

I have two detached greenhouses running north and south, north end protected by shed. One house is 18x75, three-foot side walls, eleven feet to ridge, south end glass. In this house are two four-foot benches on the sides and a solid bed in the center. Under each bench there are two flows and two returns for hot water, all 3-inch. The other house is 11x60, eight feet to ridge, three-foot side walls. There is no glass in ends or walls. There is a two-foot bench on each side and a solid bed in center. There are two 3-inch pipes all around. The houses are used for miscellaneous stock. I am thinking of putting in a tubular steam boiler to use for hot water. It is eight feet long by three feet wide, with twenty-two 3-inch tubes, rated at eighteen horse-power. Can I heat 1,000 feet of 3-inch pipe with it, boiler tubes connected with sleeve couplings packed with cement and oakum? How many and what size of outlets and inlets will be required on the boiler? If the dome is not removed, would you take the flows out of it?

H. R. B.

The outlet and intake openings in the boiler should be 4-inch. If the boiler has a dome, by all means take the flow pipe from the top or side of the dome and bring the return to the under side of the shell near the rear. The boiler will easily carry 1,000 feet of 3-inch hot-water pipe; in fact, it has capacity to carry 1,500 lineal feet of 3-inch pipe when fired to its full capacity. The piping in the larger house is sufficient, but the house sixty feet long cannot be maintained at 60 degrees during severe weather with the amount of piping provided. If, however, one length (sixty feet) can be added along the most exposed side, the above noted temperature can be maintained under ordinary conditions.

Superior Boilers Are Good Boilers.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.
"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers, no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettig.

ROUND "BURNHAM" BOILERS

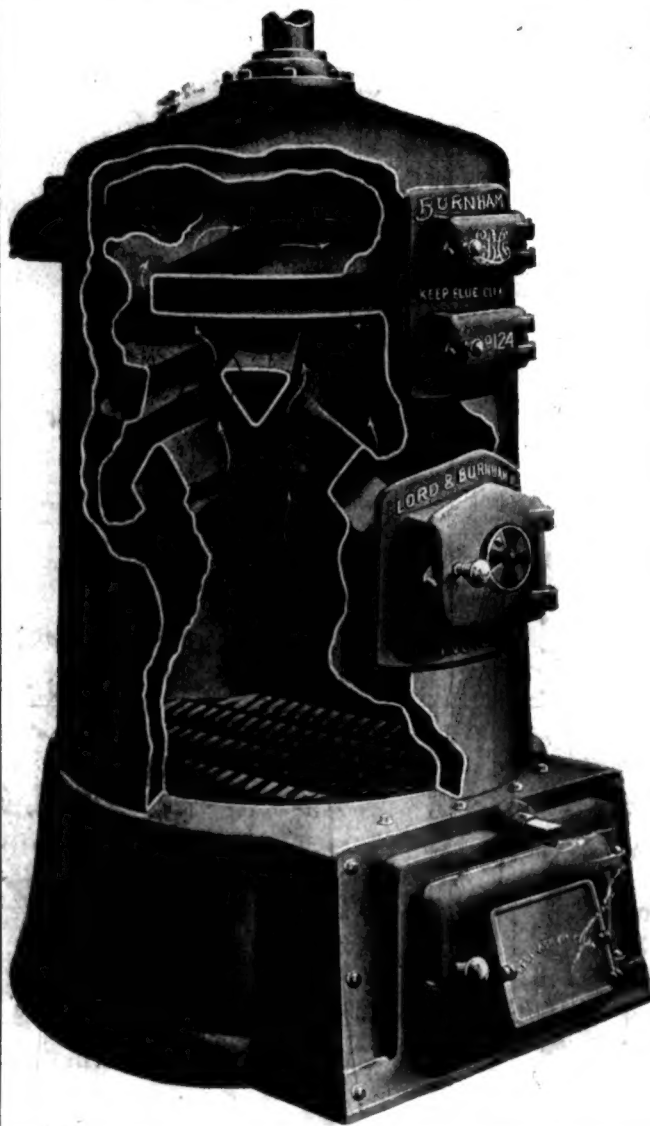

These useful and economical Boilers are designed for small heating plants. Study the Illustration on this page, and note these Good Points:

1.—Cast in one piece above the base, eliminating rust and leakage and making it the easiest to install.

2.—The largest heating surface possible in a boiler of this size.

3.—All surfaces exposed to flame have water on the opposite side, making warping or burning out impossible.

4.—A deep fire-pot, giving space above the coals for perfect combustion of gases and floating carbon, and sufficient room for fuel to insure the minimum of attention.

6.—Cleaning doors, affording access to every part liable to become fouled.

7.—Adapted for hard or soft coal, coke or wood.

8.—May be used for hot water or steam. In the latter case an ample steam dome is provided.

Write to Our New York Office and Enclose 10 Cents Postage for Heating and Ventilating Catalogue, and Greenhouse Construction Catalogue, 5 Cents Each.
